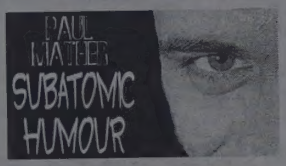
Behind the scenes at Subatomic



(Open on: Paul, sitting at his desk.)

PAUL: Hi! You know, if there's one thing that's fascinated people throughout history, it's me. People are always asking about me, and how I put together this column. "How long did it take you to write that?" They say. Or: "Does somebody pay you for that?" Or, even: "Is writing that column some sort of court-mandated thing?"

In light of this fascination with all things me, I thought we'd take a break from the fun and frivolity this week. Instead, I'll give you a tour of my office — a behind-the-scenes glimpse, if you will, at the life of a humour columnist.

(Paul pats his computer.)

PAUL: It all starts here, with my Macintosh G4. Four hundred MHz and 196 Megs of RAM. Why do I need such a powerful computer to write a 550-word column? The answer is simple: distractions. My Mac allows me to keep Subatomic Humour from being too funny by constantly tempting me to play "The Sims." Also, it allows me to keep my Web browser constantly open, so I can suddenly stop writing for no reason and waste time looking up some useless piece of trivia like who played Oscar Goldman.

(Paul gets up and walks over to a door labelled "TOP SECRET")

PAUL: But that's the past. Let's turn to the future. Behind this door is my automatic writing project. As I've said before, if an infinite number of monkeys can write Shakespeare, it should take about seven to write this column. And, in this room, I've taken the first steps towards realizing that dream.

(Paul opens the door, revealing a mangy-looking monkey sitting in front of a computer. The monkey is playing "The Sims," although when it sees Paul it quickly quits and guiltily tries to look as if it's working. Paul frowns and shuts the door.)

PAUL: I'm thinking of starting over with chickens. Now, let's head to the basement and see my nuclear accelerator . . .

(Paul walks toward the stairs but, at the last minute, trips on a box of unsold "100 Years of Subatomic Humour" books. He goes flying, head over heels, down many flights of steps . . . finally landing in a painful and bloody heap on the basement floor.)

PAUL: Arghhh . . . legs broken . . . body shattered . . . broken femur popping through skin . . . must call Hercules . . .

(Paul fiddles with his belt buckle, but succeeds only in undoing his belt, revealing the beginnings of an impressive beer belly.)

PAUL: Damn! Wore wrong belt! Must get help . . . can't last long . . .

(Paul notices his cat watching from a nearby sofa. He crawls to it, causing an artery to open and begin spurting blood across the room.)

PAUL: Hey . . . cat . . . go for help . . . go for help, boy . . . go upstairs and call an ambulance . . .

(The cat stares blankly for a moment . . . then, a glimmer of understanding appears in its eyes. Decisively, it leaps down from the couch . . . and begins happily lapping from the pool of blood that is rapidly collecting around Paul's mangled body.)

PAUL: Argh! Should have got a fish . . . come on, you stupid cat! Go for help!

(Paul's wife, who is standing right there, turns to him.)

PAUL'S WIFE: I'm right here; why don't you ask me?

PAUL: No! I want to see if the cat will do it!

(Paul passes out. Fade to black.)

ANNOUNCER: Will Paul survive? Was he right about Oscar Goldman? And how's that monkey coming along? Tune in for the answers to these exciting questions and more . . . in the next exciting episode of Subatomic Humour.

(Paul is going on hiatus for the holiday season. He'll be back if he ever manages to stem the bleeding and get through to Hercules.)

Donair be praised

O-kay... this is a few more people than I expected. A classroom full of 40-odd bright, shiny faces, note-books open, pens poised, gathered to hear us talk about... what? How to make a living as a freelancer without trading style for gigs covering new condominium developments? How to avoid the hellish waking (barely) nightmare that is the life of a staff writer on general assignment, and still pay the rent? Hilarious tales of drunkenness and sloth?

The occasion was a Canadian University Press conference hosted by the U of A's Gateway, and I had been invited by old pal Scott Bana to join him in giving a talk on "Gonzo Journalism", whatever that means. Now, you may know Scott as one of North-central Alberta's top gay architects, designer of the Vigoda Building in Leduc, the Temperate Pavilion at Sundre Botanical Gardens and other marvels of drywall and chipboard. But he's also the hard drinkin', hard lovin', drug smokin' wild man of contemporary cutting-edge interior design journalism; after being bounced from his contributing editor position at Edmonton Decorator for calling Light Taupe a color for "wife-beaters, Communists and pussies," he kicked it indie-style and never looked back.

So, yeah. Forty-odd student journalists, forty-odd minutes to speak and zero-odd planning and prep. Where to now? What's going to happen? Cold sweat on neck-backs as we stumbled through our stories and vague media theory. I wondered: why isn't anybody leaving the room in disgust?

Shows what I know. Turns out they loved it. Guess they don't watch TV much where they come from. But the best question after the session, the one that cut to the heart of all I hold dear and holy, came from a girl from Winnipeg when she asked me: What's up with donairs?

Um... sorry, what? Seems they don't have donairs over Winnipeg way, and Edmonton's two-per-block frequency of rotisserie-grilled spiced meat emporiums is a little baffling. A-1 King Donair, with its brilliant mural featuring Giant Armored Baby King was weird enough for her already; little did she know I was about to blow her Portage-and-Main mind.

"Baby," says I, "you've gotta come see the God of Donair."

Have you seen this thing, this miraculous creation? Crafted by Charles Smart (25 years donair experience) himself, over the course of three hours, it stands in the cooler of the 91 Street and Whyte outlet ("Leader of the Taste, Federally inspected"), viewable through a little window like a piece of the True Cross or St. Francis' Toenails or some Indiana Jones idol. Five feet, seven inches of donair apotheosis, and above it a simple sign like a prayer:

BUY ME/ BITE ME/ I AM THE BIGGEST/ 567 LBS

Needless to say, my guest converted on the spot, transported by donair rapture, vegetarianism be damned, and the Church of Donair now spreads across the prairie like a spicy, saucy, pita-wrapped jihad, lettuce-laden and wrapped in foil paper.

Score one for the City of Champions! Score one for donair!

(Legal note: Donair God isn't really "THE BIGGEST." Kadir Celikbas of Turkey crafted a 5' 3", 2,270 lb. "doner kebab" at Zurich in the summer of '98. Its fate? Eaten by the Swiss.)

Preparing native community for the New Economy

The way Dan Martel sees it, the Internet and e-commerce could be the most powerful tools for economic development in Alberta's aboriginal communities.

This week Martel, founder of Edmonton-based Four Winds and Associates, a consulting firm that helps aboriginal communities address economic, social and health issues, has launched aboriginalmall.com, which he hopes will help stimulate entrepreneurial spirit in the province's most isolated regions. As far as he knows, it will be the most comprehensive Web site in the country tailored specifically for First Nations and Métis peoples.

The idea for aboriginalmall.com was first hatched when Martel saw statistics of native communities' exploding population. By 2016, the birth rate among natives will be three times that of the country as a whole.

"I started wondering, how are we preparing for the new economy? Are these kids going to be equipped for the information age?" Martel explained. Certainly, the oil boom has provided a lot of employment, but Martel said that for the most part, aboriginals are employed as low-skilled labourers. When the economy slows, they'll be the first ones thrown out of work again. Martel became convinced that the answer to long-term stability is in information technology.

The beauty of the Internet is that location doesn't matter. One can live in an isolated village along the 60th parallel and be just as connected as someone in a downtown Edmonton high-rise. Martel acknowledged that it's likely there is a lower proportion of aboriginal homes with access to the Internet, but said most band offices, friendship centres and similar organizations are on line and should be able to provide access.

For now, aboriginalmall.com is largely a retail Web site. Native artisans can market their products through the site. Customers can order directly from the producer, while inventory, accounting and e-transactions are handled by Martel's company. "That way," Martel explained, "Grandma in Fort McMurray, who produces one set of moccasins a month, can sell them. We keep track of inventory so the number of orders never exceeds her ability to make them."

The site will also allow other businesses people to market their businesses, thus connecting businesses with clients they might not otherwise reach. There is also a directory of events and organizations of interest to the aboriginal community.

— Andrew Hanon

Dan Martel hopes Aboriginalmall.com will connect isolated communities with larger markets.

Union's employees languish on picket line

A warm fire crackles in a portable wrought iron fireplace and pumpkin-head scarecrows, left over from Halloween, recline in their chairs. Striking workers emerge from inside a makeshift shelter cobbled together from wood and tarps to provide cover from cold winds. All this suggest the strikers ought to replace those Halloween decorations outside the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees' offices with images of Santa and his reindeer — there's no indication this strike will be over any time soon.

This is a labour dispute with a difference: some 75 unionized workers are striking against their employer, Alberta's largest union. The workers serve as negotiators, clerical workers and support staff for AUPE and they've been on strike since Sept. 25. This summer, they helped steer AUPE through an illegal strike, prying hefty pay increases for health care workers from the tight fist of the Alberta government. Now, they've been walking the picket lines for more than 50 days to protect themselves from concessions AUPE is demanding of them.

"No-concession bargaining has been the corner stone of this union," says one of the striking workers. "Now they want us to take concessions?"

The fact that AUPE wants its striking employees, members of the United Steelworkers of America, to take cuts to severance packages is a contradictory stance, the striking worker said. She wonders how AUPE negotiators are going to be able to stick to their no-concession philosophy when AUPE itself went against it. "How are we going to say to an employer 'the AUPE won't accept any concessions' when the AUPE forced concessions on its own workers?"

Union president Dan McLelland argues that it's a matter of semantics. The strikers are saying they've got a list of some 60 concessions that AUPE is demanding, he said. But in fact, there are only four or five items on the bargaining table McLelland regards as actual concessions (he doesn't consider losing a car allowance if you lose your driver's licence to be a concession).

The AUPE, he said, is offering workers pay hikes between eight and 13 per cent over two years. The main stumbling block, though, is severance packages that are handed out to workers regardless of whether they quit, are fired or die.

But some workers fear that AUPE is taking advantage of them. By not settling the strike, the union is saving about $100,000 a week in payroll costs. And the union is facing tough financial times: it has already paid out a $400,000 fine for this summer's illegal strike. It also has $1.8 million in union dues at risk in a Labour Relations Board hearing. The LRB could penalize the union by relieving the province of the responsibility of collecting dues on the union's behalf for six months.

"There's some suggestion here that they are paying off that fine off the backs of the staff who worked overtime during the strike and who got called to work in the middle of the night," the striking worker said.

McLelland denied that's the strategy. "That isn't the case," he said. "The decision to strike was theirs. Now, by the way they're talking, you'd think it was a lockout."

Steelworkers' spokesperson Dennis Bennett was unavailable for comment. Contract talks resumed recently and are expected to continue this week.

Separating car ownership from transport needs

What began as one of those wishful experiments with European innovation is threatening to take off and change the very nature of automotive transport in Edmonton.

The city's first car-sharing co-op is small, but highly successful and is planning expansion in the near future. Scott Harris, who administers the program, says 19 members in the Old Strathcona area share a single car, a 1999 Toyota Tercel. He acknowledges that it's a far cry from European co-ops, some of which have 40,000 members sharing 2,000 vehicles, but given North America's deep psychological attachment to automobiles, Harris said the Strathcona experiment is a roaring success.

"It's really going against the cultural ideal," Harris said. "It separates mobility from ownership."

Here's how it works: Members pay an annual fee which gives them part ownership of car. When they need to use it, they book it through the co-op and pay based on the number of hours they use it and the distance driven. Studies have shown that, on average, people use their cars 66 minutes per day while the true cost of owning a newer vehicle (including insurance, fuel, maintenance, loan payments and depreciating value) runs $6,000 to $8,000 per year.

"You look at it that way and that's a very expensive 66 minutes," Harris said. The fees paid to the co-op cover all of those costs, so the members are only paying for the time they actually operate the vehicle.

In order for a car-share scheme to work, Harris said, there must be enough members all living within walking distance of a car to support a single vehicle. The project has sparked enough curiosity across the city that Harris is now looking at setting up another vehicle in a different neighbourhood.

While everyone seems to laud the Edmonton Joint Planning Committee on Housing for its plan to ease homelessness, some hold the Klein government responsible for the crisis.

How did we come to this?

Edmonton's homeless crisis was preventable, says an advocate for the poor

BY ANDREW HANON

One of the most pointed critics of the Klein government's social policies acknowledges that Edmonton's plan to reduce homelessness is a good one, but he still blames the Tories for creating the crisis in the first place. And what's more, Brian Bechtel, head of the Edmonton Social Planning Council, says the problem will continue as long as the provincial government blames poverty on Alberta's poor.

Two years ago city hall declared homelessness here an emergency. A homeless census conducted in March 1998 by social agencies concluded at the time that 836 people were without a permanent address. Of those, 313 couldn't even find room at an emergency shelter. Most disturbing of all, however, was the sobering statistic that of those 836 people with no permanent homes, 112 were under the age of 19 (the survey didn't include runaways, which is another issue entirely). In all, there were 70 homeless families in Edmonton.

Since that survey was conducted, the problem has grown. Last March the total had climbed to 1,125 and by September the number of homeless reached 1,160. In just over two years, the number of homeless people in Edmonton has climbed nearly 40 per cent. Now people unable to find room in emergency shelters outnumber those who can: 650 compared to 510. There are presently 146 homeless children, a 30-per-cent increase since March 1998.

What has Bechtel most enthusiastic about a new $50-million plan by the Edmonton Joint Planning Committee on Housing to combat homelessness is that it will pump more than $2.5 million into emergency and transitional housing for families. In the first year of the three-year scheme (which begins in 2000-2001), $900,000 will be spent on developing and operating 12 emergency units for families. The following year, $1.8 million will be devoted to 55 transitional units, where families can spend more time and have access to programs to help them get back on their feet.

As it stands right now, there is almost nothing available for families in such dire straits. The city has shelters for single men and single women, who make up the vast majority of the homeless population, but many advocates for the poor have for years criticized the lack of support for families.

One advocate told SEE Magazine that there's a growing number of "invisible" homeless families who shift around from place to place every few weeks, sharing rent with friends in small, cramped quarters and unsafe flop houses. They try to stay out of the system for fear that they'll be punished by having their children seized and put into foster care. It's ironic, the advocate said, that the government pays foster parents more than biological parents can receive on welfare, for looking after the same children.

And that, according to Bechtel, is why the core problem of homelessness will continue to grow in Edmonton. Since the Klein government was elected in 1993, he said, the province has been systematically ripping away at Alberta's social safety net. The cuts have been much more than a budgetary necessity; they're part of an ideological agenda. Ralph Klein and his cabinet colleagues are staunch believers in "less is more" government and that the private sector can always do things better and more efficiently than government. In Ralph Klein's world, all of society's ills are cured by the marketplace — give people jobs and everything will be all right. But if a family is plagued by substance abuse problems, mental illness and the like, the simple offer of employment isn't the solution.

"Prior to 1993, child homelessness was very rare," said Bechtel. "There was a much better income support system for people."

Bechtel is also critical of the funding structure for the homelessness strategy. Of the $50-million total, government has agreed to chip in $28.6 million, with the rest to come from private donations and grants. If all the money is raised, the plan will cover the entire spectrum of needs, from short-term to long-term housing to programs to help people with specific social needs. But what has Bechtel angry is the relatively tiny cash contribution the provincial government is making: $3 million, or six per cent of the total. The feds have committed $17 million, while city hall will contribute $1.3 million a year for three years.

Considering the provincial level of government is supposed to be responsible for delivering social programs, Bechtel said, its degree of participation in the program is shameful.

"It's a good plan, a decent plan," he said, "but the real problem is our social safety net."

BDL employees move on with their lives

It took all spring, summer and fall, but the 104 locked out employees of Brewer's Distributor Ltd. have pretty much closed an ugly chapter in their lives and in Alberta labour history.

"We had a wind-up party two weeks ago — everybody was in good spirits," said Brent Potter, who served as president of the Canadian Auto Workers Local 285. "About 70 per cent of us have found other employment and of the other 30 per cent, about two-thirds of them are taking courses or going to school."

Potter, who worked for BDL for 16 years, is now working as a welder — he earned his journeyman's ticket before joining BDL and has returned to the trade.

The workers were locked out April 4 and BDL, which distributed beer for Molson and Labatt — the rival breweries jointly own the firm — has contracted their work out to a west end firm, MTE Logistix. BDL abandoned its warehouse on 50 Street, (it's for sale), in favour of MTE's west end site.

BDL has paid out $3.8 million in severance packages, Potter said.

"That is what it cost them to rid themselves of us and in this situation they are still stuck with that building for sale for the past three months. They just finished spending, reportedly, $5 million to expand it a year ago and now it sits empty on 50 Street."

One issue with the workers remains unsettled.

"The only thing still outstanding is the transfer of pension monies to individual employees," Potter said. "That has gone slower than expected but it should be done before the end of the year."

Still, life isn't easy for the workers. One former BDL employee says he has had trouble finding a job because potential employers view him as a troublemaker.

"I had someone tell me that flat out," said Jodee Lee Sawan. "They see 'BDL' and 'labour dispute' on your résumé and they just don't want you around."

Potter says the situation for organized labour in Alberta won't improve soon. While the CAW won a legal challenge to Alberta labour laws and earned the right to strike at a secondary site — the MTE warehouse — that court ruling could be struck down.

"It's being appealed," Potter said. "But not by BDL and not by Molson's and not by Labatt — but by the Alberta government."

Pool upgrade money well spent: Phair

If the city of Edmonton spent $1 million to expand the pool at the Kinsmen Sports Centre so it could draw world-class events, and if no one is buying tickets to those events, was the $1 million wasted?

In the face of pathetic ticket sales to this weekend's World Cup Swimming event at the Kinsmen, that's the question [S]ee put to city councillor Michael Phair, who chairs city hall's community services committee.

The world cup competition is one of 10 such events being held around the world. It draws some of the best swimmers in the world — 250 athletes from 17 countries will be in the water here this weekend. But only about one-third of the 1,400 available seats per night have been sold. Swim Alberta needs to sell 80 per cent of those seats just to break even on the event, according to spokesperson Janice Johnston.

"Swim Alberta is on the hook for half the losses," she said. "And that goes back to the 35,000 kids in grassroots swim programs in this province."

So given the fact that even the Oilers have trouble selling tickets these days, was spending $1 million on amateur swimming a good investment for the city? A report submitted to the city's community services committee Nov. 1[4] boasts of the achievement. The pool is run by the city Enterprise Portfolio of facilities along with the likes of the Valley Zoo, Fort Edmonton Park and municipal golf courses. Those facilities pool their resources to operate self-sufficiently, says committee chair Phair.

"There is no question that money has been useful because (the Kinsmen facility) is among the highest-use pools in the city," Phair said. "There certainly was a good case that that pool could use expansion for competitions. And people do pay an admission charge, so that helps to pay for it."

Phair suggests this weekend's world cup event could perhaps have been marketed more aggressively.

"We've tried to assist in the last minute now by indicating to our staff and employees that the tickets are available," he said. "But perhaps the other aspect is that swimming doesn't lend itself greatly to spectator sport in terms of sitting in the stands."

Tickets are indeed still available to the event, which features some of the world's strongest swimmers. Three groups of tickets are available: Gold seats: $80/two days or $50/one day; Silver seats: $50/two days or $25/one day; and Bronze seats: $30/two days or $15 one/day. Tickets are available through Ticketmaster (451-8000).

All the minutiae that's fit to print

Mainstream media just can't get enough of pointless election details

BY RICHARD CAIRNEY

A drunken teen, the size of a political opponent's campaign signs, homophobia, vandalism and, oh yeah, health care, dominated local news coverage of the federal election this week.

In the drunken teen department, The Edmonton Journal's campaign coverage noted that as Edmonton Southeast Liberal candidate David Kilgour and volunteers were shoring up a sign in Mill Woods last week, they encountered a drunken, shivering 15-year-old girl. The candidate and his workers drove the girl to Kilgour HQ, gave her a piping-hot, alcohol-free beverage and called police.

Despite its tireless pursuit of covering campaign minutiae, The Journal neglected to report Kilgour's thoughts on drug and alcohol abuse among children, the social conditions that lead to such tragedies, or the girl's ultimate fate.

(Presumably, a friendly counsellor gave her a doughnut and advised her to stick closer to church-oriented youth activities.)

Local reporters were also mesmerized by an ongoing battle over campaign signs. After reports of a sign sabotage on Justice Minister Anne McLellan's team early in the campaign, the focus has now shifted to size.

Apparently it matters. The city has regulations governing the size of campaign signs and Edmonton North Liberal candidate Jim Jacuta said he planned to switch on New Democrat opponent Laurie Lang, alleging the ND signs are a few centimetres too big.

The Sun dedicated about nine inches of copy to the story, which is about nine inches too much.

Nearly a week had passed before the Sun picked up on a SEE article about the local gay community's any-one-but-Alliance campaign.

Gays and lesbians have been embittered by remarks made and positions taken by current CA members and their shenanigans while toiling under the Reform banner. But Edmonton Strathcona MP Rahim Jaffer, who recently went dancing at a local gay club to prove he's no homophobe, has objected to such stereotyping.

Reporters on the cop beat were getting plenty of mileage out of political vandalism this week too. Liberal volunteers reported an incident of sign defacement to police.

But Tim Uppal, a Canadian Alliance candidate duking it out with Kilgour in Edmonton Southeast, suffered a much more serious attack. Someone took out the double-paned windows at his campaign office at 5220-23 Ave.

Speculation that the act was racially motivated (Uppal is a Sikh who wears a turban and full beard) was dismissed by Uppal and his opponents.

In the arena of actual policies, The Journal launched an eight-part series on health care, just as the issue comes to a boil: the Liberals have toned down commercials that accuse the Alberta government of creating two-tier, American style health care with the controversial Bill 11; Prime Minister Jean Chrétien suggested the province could lose health transfer payments over the issue; Alberta Health Minister Gary Mar called the PM a liar and a bully for those remarks. And every day, The Journal runs an exhaustive piece on the subject.

Meanwhile, The Sun has begun publishing photos of candidates making door calls and volunteers waving signs at passing motorists.— both of which are apparently THE issues of this election.

I'm being stereotyped, Jaffer says

BY RICHARD CAIRNEY

Rahim Jaffer is growing weary of being labelled a bigot because he's an Alliance MP. Jaffer, the MP for Edmonton Strathcona, said he was blindsided by a pamphlet being distributed among the city's gay community urging them to vote strategically against the Alliance because the party is homophobic.

Last week several influential members of Edmonton's gay community — among them city councillor Michael Phair — published a pamphlet entitled United We Have Made a Difference: Vote and Do It Again. The group endorses candidates in each of Edmonton's six ridings; in three where the Liberals have a chance, voters are urged to support them, while in the other three both the Liberal and New Democrat candidates are recommended, in order to send a clear signal to the Alliance.

"The only effective way to keep our hard-earned gains is to vote against the Alliance Party and vote for candidates who respect us," the pamphlet urges. "The mainstream media are telling us that there are no issues in this election. That is wrong! What we have gained could all be lost."

Some gay activists are horrified by the burgeoning popularity of the right-wing Alliance; even Liberal Justice Minister Anne McLellan could lose her Edmonton West seat in a sweep of the city. They fear that if Stockwell Day becomes prime minister the clock could be turned back years on gay issues. While in provincial politics, Day developed a lengthy record of anti-gay measures, including trying exclude sexual orientation from human rights legislation and trying to prevent public funding of projects on behalf of gays.

But Jaffer argues those who make such sweeping generalizations about the Alliance are guilty of exactly the same kind of intolerance that his party is accused of.

He wondered how the pamphlet's authors could endorse individual candidates without also publishing their individual records on the issue in question. Likewise, he said, it's unfair to issue a blanket condemnation of Alliance candidates without first talking to them individually.

Jaffer told SEE Magazine he tried to approach Phair last week about the issue, but the city councillor refused to discuss it with him.

The federal candidate said his party simply has a different philosophy of what's necessary to achieve equality in society. Rather than the divisive practice of protecting identifiable groups' rights with legislation, Jaffer said, the Alliance avoids categorizing people. Everyone should simply be afforded the same rights.

Jaffer raised eyebrows recently when he was spotted dancing at The Roost, a well-known gay night club. He was with some friends who wanted to go dancing after a fund-raising dinner. Some of the regulars recognized him wanted to debate the Alliance's attitude toward gays. Jaffer said they were initially hostile, but once he was able to explain the party's stand they became much more amicable.

Interestingly, while Jaffer said he fully supports the notion of gays' acceptance into mainstream society, he opposes legal recognition of gay marriage. He invites open debate on the subject and if the arguments are compelling enough, he said he would change his stand. But for now, there is too much historic and religious significance tied the principal of "one-man-one-woman" for government to change it arbitrarily.

Jaffer also condemned Alliance opponents' predilection for dismissing the party as a refuge for extremists and bigots. He acknowledged that "some individuals who join the party have their own views on issues, but they are not representative of the party. Bigots are quickly marginalized and their narrow views are not tolerated by the mainstream of the party."

Here's something for voters to chew on

BY RICHARD CAIRNEY

Outside of the blatant Stockwell Day cheerleading in The Sun, the most entertaining political propaganda we've seen so far this election comes from the Edible Ballot Society. The group advocates — well, it advocates eating your ballot. It's a scheme that's clever, cutting and not bad, overall. The society "is encouraging Canadians to eat their ballots on Nov. 27 to protest the futility of electoral politics," an EBS press release says. "Individuals will also be selling their votes on the Edible Ballot Web page, through classified ads, and on EBay in the hope of bringing market efficiency to the electoral process."

Well. It seems that market efficiency is pretty much the cure for every social ailment these days, anyways. We're bringing private-sector smarts to the public education system and we're bringing private-market rules to public health care. Even city hall is getting in on the game, proposing to better serve clients (aka you and me) by piggybacking on the privatization of Alberta registries. Soon, a number of city services will be offered at the storefront-style private offices. Strapped for cash in the face of dwindling provincial grants, the city seems to have reasoned that if you can't beat 'em, join 'em.

So too have the Edible Ballot people made the leap of logic. Soon, you'll be able to surf the Internet and buy a vote for the candidate of your choice. Say you live in Edmonton Strathcona. Polls indicate a squeaker of a race between Liberal Jonathan Dai and incumbent Alliance MP Rahim Jaffer. Trouble is, you've only got the one vote. Or have you? See, under the Edible Ballot plan you could buy a bunch of people's votes. For the right kind of money, I'd even be willing to vote Reform. I mean, Alliance. The Edible Ballot folk insist they are simply taking the state of campaign politics to its logical conclusion. Votes are bought all the time when corporations make enormous campaign contributions, they argue, so why not sell individual votes?

The fact that it's illegal is no barrier to the Edible Ballot people. It's also illegal to deface a ballot, so the group is essentially encouraging us to break the law one way or another. Local EBS spokesperson Marika Schwandt doesn't want you to just nibble at your ballot discreetly, either. Oh no. She'd prefer you make a really big deal of it. "You can't just eat a ballot itself," she says. "You have to cook it in a wok or run it through a blender first."

What — right there in the voting booth?"We are all about spectacle. You could even just slap it between a couple of slices of bread," says Schwandt. "We are hoping people will start to think 'why am I voting for Jean Chrétien or whoever? Do I really want them in or am I just voting for the best of the worst?' "

Well, people who vote Liberal probably are voting for the best of the worst. People who vote Alliance are just misguided. And come election day, pundits will say that a vote for the Progressive Conservatives or the New Democrats is a protest vote.

But there is no such thing as a formal protest vote in this country. Voters are not given the option to vote "None of the above."

Boycotting the vote is no option either, because you don't get a chance to express yourself.

Maybe the Edible Ballot people are going too far. But they do make a point. With the exception of the Canadian Alliance's support for recall of elected officials, no one in this country seems to support any sort of electoral reform. That reform is badly needed — but at the price of electing an Alliance government? That's too rich for my blood.

In any event, electoral reforms should speak less to recalling someone you don't like and more to electing someone who will represent you. If it takes a few hungry rebels cooking up ballots to set the wheels of change in motion, all I have to say is bon appetite!

READY TO GOVERN

Re-Elect Rahim Jaffer on November 27

- The Canadian Alliance will remove 1.4 million low-income Canadians from the tax roll.
- The Canadian Alliance will guarantee stable long-term funding for health care and ensure that modern health care services are available to all Canadians regardless of their financial situation.
- The Canadian Alliance will end corporate welfare and focus on providing assistance and opportunity to those who truly need it.
- The Canadian Alliance is committed to building an innovative, competitive economy through sustainable funding for basic research in both science and liberal arts.

'Education squads? What drug was Delanoy on?

Editor, SEE:

I would like to address the concerns of one Chris Delanoy, whose letter appeared here on Nov. 9. As I read his letter, I placed my hand on the outer right corner of the magazine, only to watch as it slowly melded into the paper. Words bled from the page and ran across my hand. Was I high? No. I had merely stepped into that nether region known as the Hyperbole Zone (cue music and the voice of Rod Serling). Delanoy says in part, "I don't use drugs, but even I may start sleeping with one eye open, in case Chief Bob decides to send one of his "education" squads in one night."

Bless his freedom-loving heart, though.

Wasylyshen comes out with the innocuous comment "Let's legalize it and get it over with. Is that a reasonable position? It may be, but I suggest the issue is much deeper than that. I'm certainly open to discussion on it, but if we're going to legalize drugs because we're frustrated, then that's not a good reason," which leads Delanoy to believe that the chief " . . . misspoke when describing his philosophy of life. A more accurate statement would have been "Live and let live — the way I say so. Or I'll bash your head in." It's perfectly all right to liken Wasylyshen to a member of the Gestapo when he, a cop, is against what is currently an illegal activity, but it's not all right for Wasylyshen to even question the motives behind the bid to legalize drugs for fear of being painted a baton monger. I understand now. Never has the Zone made so much sense.

The second thing I would like to address is the letter from Matthew Johnston. Johnston said: "The right to self-ownership, of course, must include the right to engage in reckless and self-destructive acts, provided nobody else is directly and unwillingly harmed by those acts." But one of the questions often overlooked in the discussion about the legalization of drugs is, which drugs should be legalized. There are many narcotics that severely impair judgment. Crime amongst drug users is often higher than that of the general population. I would be willing to bet that the legalization of hard narcotics would directly correlate to a rise in assault and murder. If someone, say, mistakes me for another and knifes me while high on legal crack, I consider that an infringement of my freedom — on my right to the safety of my person. To argue that many otherwise innocent people are being jailed for the petty crime of possessing soft drugs is valid. To take that to the extreme and make the blanket generalization that the war should be stopped is unrealistic at best.

Judge not, until ye have all the information

Editor, SEE:

Here we go again, bashing Robert Latimer (Museum asks: what would Latimer do?, SEE, Nov. 2-8). Whatever happened to that old saw 'judge not . . .'? The most egregious part of the judging going on is that it is being done by walking, talking, rational/intelligent handicapped people who, no doubt, enjoy a quality of life like the Latimer family noticed their daughter did not have.

It is galling for both the anti-Latimer and anti-abortion groups to assume that they have all the information. Please folks, if the fetus or Tracy were granted the right to say yes to birth and subsequently to life, the opposite must follow. They have the right to say no. The assumption that each birth will result in a healthy, wanted child is ludicrous. The fetus has the right to say no, not now, not here and now, or not now with him (father). I don't want to be beaten by him; or I don't want to be born into this chaos right now; or whatever. In Tracy Latimer's case, her family had no doubt developed a communication system that allowed them to relate to each other. How can we presume to know that Tracy did not influence her family? How do we know what primitive feelings drove him — perhaps she said 'no more' and her family 'heard' her.

Let us as a society relax and remember decisions are not made in a vacuum, there are two sides and one has a different method of communication. To date, there are not "grannies in gurneys" travelling down a slippery slope to be euthanized, nor is this true for any other marginalized societal group.

Judge not — and always give the other side of the argument. If one is granted the right to say yes, they are automatically granted the right to say no (agreement is not mandatory).

Paving Churchill Square destroys a refuge in the downtown

Editor, SEE

What the hell did our fine city do to that once beautiful Churchill Square? It used to be such a much-welcomed rest area and refuge amidst the hustle and bustle of the downtown craziness. I'd hazard a guess one of the "enlightened" politician decided to turn it into the concrete jungle it now have — because, as you're well aware, they know better. Please, boys and girls, some things are better left alone.

Come to think of it, a similar tragedy happened to that smaller Jasper Avenue and 106 Street mini-park. One more item on the agenda for scrapping city hall policies: sorry, folks, but would someone please make changes to the intersection of 95 Street and 102A Avenue? I've lived in the area for a while and witnessed an accident almost weekly. Are you waiting for someone to get killed before changes are made?

Loud 'N Queer Cabaret continues shaking up the mainstream

BY RICHARD CAIRNEY

Some meetings of the minds are legendary. There was the Cold War era's famous Kitchen Debate between Kruschev and Nixon. Canadian politics hit a fever pitch in the 1988 election during a leaders' debate over Free Trade. Just call a heated exchange between producers Darrin Hagen and Ron Jenkins The Really Loud 'N Queer Debate.

PREVIEW

Loud 'N Queer Cabaret Guys in Disguise/Workshop West Theatre
Nov. 17, 18 at The Third Space

Decibel levels rise when Hagen says he's resentful of gay or lesbian stars who come out of the closet only after they've made it big. Hagen cites kd lang. She became famous, he complains, then announced she was a lesbian, and turned that announcement into a photo op. "Achieving success as an open lesbian would have meant so much more," Hagen insists.

Not so, responds Jenkins, who argues that if people enjoy a performer's music, that performer will become a star.

"What does kd lang's sexuality have to do with her success?" Jenkins asks. "Ashley MacIssac? I don't care, I don't know. I just want to listen to his music. What's the point? Who cares who kd sleeps with?"

The point is that at the same time lang was making a name for herself, in the closet, openly gay artists were becoming famous, and serving as role models for the gay community, Hagen argues.

"You've got people like Ronnie Burkett and Brad Fraser who are international renowned queers (from Alberta) who have achieved the kinds of success that so many other Alberta artists haven't. What we need is really militant queers coming out and saying, 'fuck you.' It kind of becomes their job in this situation."

Jenkins suggests the theatre business has been "a haven" for gay artists and that other corners of the entertainment industry aren't as accepting.

"Could Rock Hudson have been Rock Hudson?" he asks.

"The policies that kept Rock Hudson in the closet don't exist anymore... and none of that happened by people staying in the closet," Hagen argues.

"So would you out people?" Jenkins asks. "Outing people is terrorism. It's political terrorism."

No, says Hagen. He may not agree with someone's choice to stay in the closet, but he'll always honour it because he knows about that terrorism.

"The venom reserved for traitors to male power is special and repugnant," he observes.

Hagen and Jenkins, who co-present this year's Loud 'N Queer Cabaret with Guys in Disguise and Workshop West Theatre respectively, have had the argument before; they'll have it again. But they're sure to agree on staging provocative, entertaining performers at Loud 'N Queer. And orientation isn't a big deal.

"You don't need to be queer to come and enjoy the show," says Hagen. "And you don't need to be queer to be a part of the show."

"This stuff just lends itself to cabaret," said Jenkins. "We're saying 'here are some voices you may not have heard before.' "

Loud 'N Queer "speaks to a culture of openness that's not here right now," says Hagen. To define oneself as queer, he notes, is a political statement. But even with a federal election being held, and a so-called "scorched earth" battle for the U.S. presidency, Hagen says campaigning politicians have little to do with actual politics.

"Stockwell Day isn't politics, Stockwell Day is rants and raves and rehashing the same tired old religious crap, that dogma we've all had to listen to the past thousand years," said Hagen. "The real politics, the real change that happens in the world, is from the people that don't get involved in that — who don't subscribe, and find other ways to change the world.

"The people who change the world are people like (video and film director) Spike Jonze and people like (performance artist) Karen Findlay smearing, you know, beans and whipped cream all over herself, and shitting on stage and taking national endowment for the arts money to do that. Those are the people who are shaking up society."

There will be no shitting on stage, but some shaking up of society will occur at the cabaret, hosted by Hagen. The line-up for this year (the eighth Loud 'N Queer Cabaret in nine years) introduces a few new elements: one is fireside chats with the likes of councillor Michael Phair, performer/puppeteer Ronnie Burkett, Poki Schvedtar and Stockwell Gay; and for the first time ever, Loud 'N Queer Classics, bringing some of the cabaret's finest acts back to the stage. One of those is Joe Achtemichuk's sketch Should've Ordered Take Out.

"It is the most vicious thing I have ever read," says Jenkins.

Hagen describes it as "four homos sitting around a table bitching each other out. They are bitchy bitchy bitchy bitchy bitchy."

Another classic is Peter Field's The Unrestrained Homosexual. The title comes from a quote from American evangelist Jerry Falwell. And the sketch follows an "unrestrained homosexual" through his daily routines.

Other firsts this year include queer rap ("it's cultural appropriation," says Hagen) by the COCKSUCKAz, featuring a rapper named fEMinEM. Nathan Cuckow's angry lyrics, says Jenkins, are impressive.

"It's hysterical. It's aggressive and it's political and it's everything a rap song is supposed to be."

The line-up also includes Drag Kings group The Fly Bastards. They're a boy band, in a manner of speaking.

As for the politics of performing, Hagen says Loud 'N Queer isn't political in itself — rather, it's a good time.

"It's a celebration," adds Jenkins. "It's inclusiveness, it's generosity, it's openness. And it's a fot of good art."

Not everyone looks good in white, but Darrin Hagen pulls it off beautifully.

'Wooden angels'

BY MARGARET MACPHERSON

REVIEW
Happy
Ronnie Burkett Theatre of Marionettes
Theatre Network at the Roxy Theatre 10708 - 124 Street until Dec. 10

Ronnie Burkett, puppet maestro, is a genius. His latest show, Happy, playing at the venerable Roxy Theatre, banishes any lingering doubts that wooden marionettes aren't real people. These "wooden angels" can — and do — make grown-ups weep. And the strange and wonderful mind of Burkett, with his ability to link incongruous, often intangible things together, is demonstrated in the dialogues of his creations.

Happy, Raymond, Rickie, Lil, all the tenants of an uncommon apartment building in an unknown city, speak, feel, muse, fool themselves, make love, fight, and play silly head games to illustrate their own dreams. They also remember.

Each character has a past, a present and a future, and even if a few of the key players have stumbled off to the wings long ago and exist only in the memories of their friends and fellow lodgers, they are as present (and, at the same time, as invisible) as the playwright who pulls their strings and gives them voice.

Burkett invests each of his puppets with the ability to remember and then invites his audience to examine the intense and often disturbing effects those memories have on his characters' lives. The results are profoundly moving as audience members are challenged to reconsider their own memories and stack them up against something that can only be called the happiness gauge; an abstract measure that underlies and defines this amazing production.

Happy is the last of Burkett's Memory Dress Trilogy; a series of shows examining themes of lost identity, the weight of memory and the nature and wellspring of true joy. Tinka's New Dress, presented in Theatre Network's 1998 season, was, in part, about an underground resistance movement in Nazi-occupied Czechoslovakia during the Second World War. Street of Blood (1999), probably the most outrageous and technically difficult of the three, was pure prairie gothic, touching on issues of blood relations, adoptions, bad blood in families, cults and the approaching apocalypse.

Happy is like neither and like both of these. It is a story of belonging, of letting go, and of allowing faith in self and in friends to dictate a state of mind. Happy is a manifesto for ditching all the black-and-white and in-between greys in your life and living in full and glorious colour. But it isn't easy and, as usual, Burkett doesn't opt for simple solutions or a neatly wrapped-up ending.

There is death and sorrow, a grey limbo-land with a ghastly emcee walking us through the five stages of grief, and some very fully realized and endearing characters who have to make some extremely tough choices about how, and if, to carry on.

One thing is certain though: you can't experience Happy without knowing that wooden creatures, mere marionettes danced upon the stage by a thoughtful and provocative playwright, can momentarily — or even perpetually — make your heart sing.

Happy ★★★★ (out of five)

Sacred Time
Brian Webb Dance Company
John L. Haar Theatre 10045-156 Street (east entrance) Nov. 17, 18

Did you know that Brian Webb of the Brian Webb DANCE Company, department head of the DANCE department at Grant MacEwan College, and a DANCER for more than 30 years gets funded by the Canada Council as a multi-disciplinary artist, not as a dance artist? His upcoming concert at the John L. Haar Theatre on Nov. 17 and 18 includes video-maker Tim Folkman and Edmonton Symphony Orchestra's resident composer Allan Gilliland as equal collaborators.

"I see interdisciplinary art as a collaboration of various texts in a democratic exchange; all are equal partners," said Webb.

Long known for solo work that collaborated with visual artists like Blair Brennan, Sacred Time includes dancers Tania Alvarado, James Viveiros, Dustin Anderson, Walter Kubanek and Doug Rachinski. Musicians Gilliland, Dave Wall, Graham Kidd, Ron Samson and Trevor Brandenberg join the dancers on stage, with Folkman's screen projections used as another interactive element.

"This is a big piece," Webb says, understating the case.

And it's a project that took a long time to create. Webb has changed his process to resemble his colleague, Montreal's Paul Andre Fortier's, process. This piece has taken a year and a half instead of an eight-week rehearsal period. "I take time, I leave it and let it mull over in my body," said Webb.

At 49, that body has found a new lease on life as a dancer. "Last Christmas I saw Butoh master Kazuohno in a 2-1/2 hour solo show that was the most powerful dance experience I've ever had. He's 93. What this means is that my career is only half over."

An abstract piece without a narrative thread, Sacred Time deals with the transformation of energy or life force. Dance is about the interior workings of the body. The soul is a physical manifestation of that.

The fact that there are five male dancers (plus the five male musicians) and only one female dancer on stage is also significant. Reading an Annie Proulx short story in the New Yorker a couple of years ago, Webb "recognized the female writer who understood the male psyche. There is a phenomenal dynamic at play when you put one woman in a group of men."

The dancers range in age from 22 to 37 and come from disparate backgrounds, initiating a change in Webb's choreographic process.

"I create the movement and then give the people the opportunity to develop the movement on their bodies."

Play explores exiled Russian prince's journey of self-discovery

BY RICHARD CAIRNEY

If you were royalty and forced into exile during a revolution and then wound up living in on a farm in Ontario in 1919, you'd probably feel cursed. But that's not the case for a young Russian prince who takes centre stage in Stewart Lemoine's The Hothouse Prince.

In fact, the young Grand Duke Dimitri Romanov-Orsk gains such an immediate understanding and sympathy for the Bolsheviks who overthrow his world, that the spirit of the revolution saves him.

Lemoine brings audiences along through that uprising, following the prince's escape, moving from the lap of luxury to complete poverty.

"The France he experiences has nothing to do with the aristocracy at all," says Lemoine. "It is something altogether more squalid."

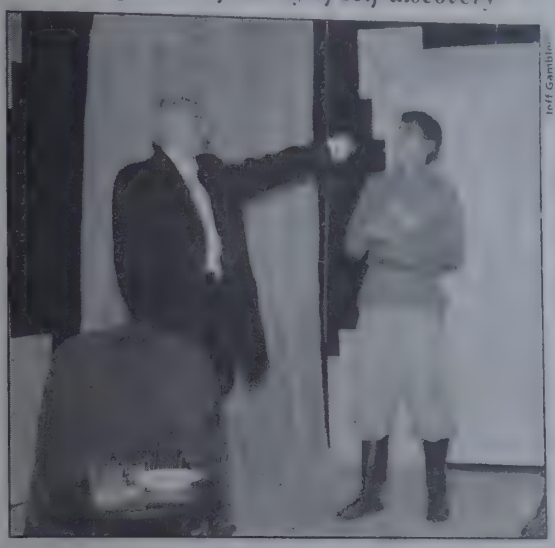
The three Lazarev sisters, daughters of the royal family's gardener, form a thread that runs through the story. Played by Dana Wylie, the three are different characters, of course, but they share the same values. The youngest, Anya, is a Bolshevik who holds the Prince (Josh Dean) and his sister hostage.

"She kind of puts her ass on the line to save him because even though she believes strongly in the cause, there is no reason to execute him," Wylie says.

So Anya helps the Prince escape to France. He seeks out Anya's sister Elena, who has become a prostitute and heroin addict. It is a set of circumstances entirely foreign to the Prince, who has led a pampered, sheltered life. The Prince and his sister were essentially raised in a nursery.

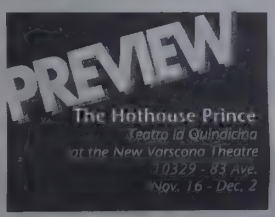
"Sometimes in the summer they'd go for walks and in the winter sometimes they'd go for sleigh rides," explains Dean.

But the young prince is nothing if not adaptive.



Jeff Gamble

Josh Dean (right) plays the sheltered, but adaptable Grand Duke Dimitri Romanov-Orsk in The Hothouse Prince.



"As soon as the revolution comes through the door, it instantly gives him a different perspective," Dean says.

From the seedy side of Paris, the exiled Prince is shipped off to the third Lazarev sister, Sonyetka. She has married a Canadian soldier and moved to a farm in Ontario.

Isn't that the last place on earth a Prince would want to be? Not according to Lemoine.

"Ontario is a paradise for him. You sort of have to see how it plays out but it makes perfect sense at the end. A lot of the Russian nobility of the time ended up in a lot of strange places."

The play made its debut in 1991 at the now-defunct Citadel Theatre Teen Fest. The story, as Lemoine writes it, is moving.

"The first time I read the script I actually cried at the end, and I've never done that on just a reading of a play," says Dean. "It is one of the most beautiful plays I have ever read and don't exaggerate that in anyway.

"I read it. Then read it again. I've kind of read it every night, or parts of it every day, since I got the script."

California dreamin'

BY RICHARD CAIRNEY

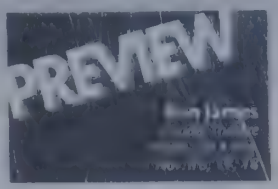
Ron James is almost furious when the topic of the CBC television program Star Spangled Canucks comes up. It chronicles the outrageous success Canadian performers have had in Hollywood.

It isn't true," he professes. "Those shows piss me off. They aren't real. They perpetuate the myth that the Grail awaits us if we just cross the border and grab it. But it's not true — it's a struggle."

James should know. He, his wife and their then 18-month-old child moved to Los Angeles in 1990 searching out that very same success. And for a couple of days there, it looked like he had made. James had been cast in a new television series called M[illegible] Show. Photos of James and the cast were published in glossy magazines one day and the next someone pulled the plug.

"The next thing I know I'm pulling a tree out of the ground in Robert Urich's front yard with my buddy's pool company."

James took his tale of woe and used it to his advantage, turning it into the one-man show Up and Down in Shakey Town: One Man's Journey Through the California Dream. The production turned James' world around. He won critical acclaim at the Edinburgh Fringe Festival and has played to capacity crowds in Canada. It was turned into a 90-minute special on the Comedy Network, but you'll get to see most of the show live, when James performs at the Citadel Theatre.



"All of the reviews of the show say that you may have seen it on TV, but it's better live. With stand-up, it's something primal. It is fireside storytelling: 'let's go back to the cave and watch the crossed-eyed guy who can't hit a water buffalo, but can tell the story really well.' I'm the cross-eyed guy."

That's half of his show. The other half ("after the 20-minute break theatres make you take, so they can sell you a pop,"), is straight stand-up from James, who won a Gemini Award last year as a writer with This Hour Has 22 Minutes and was voted by his peers as Comedian of the Year in the first annual Canadian Comedy Awards.

"The second half has more of a rock and roll sensibility to it," he says. That covers everything from the mosquito-driven torment of a camping trip to the struggle to keep up in a technological age.

Right now, James is riding a tide of successive small victories that have joined forces to put him at the top of his field. This fall, Global Television launches the first season of James' sitcom, Blackfly. The 13 half-hour episodes feature the struggles of fur traders at Fort Simpson-Eaton during the late 1700s and pokes fun at contemporary political and social issues. "If CBC's series (Canada: A People's History), which cost a dollar for every man, woman and child in the country, is the history degree, Blackfly is the remedial class that had to share its supper, our budget was so thin," he says.

But he ain't bitching.

"It has only been a blink of an eye [illegible] being hungry was only yesterday. I started walking on this road a long time ago. I'm just shooting for consistency now."

Tragically Hip puts their music to work

Marathon show unearths some old material to spring on fans

BY CRAIG ELLIOTT

Show of hands, please: how many of you, when presented with the title of the Tragically Hip's latest, Music @ Work, thought of the Seven Dwarves? How many thought of Lite Rock stations pooping out the soft hits of Lionel Ritchie and George Michael from filing cabinet perches, soothing innumerable receptionists into not starting floods in their workplaces' washrooms, just so they might get to go home an hour and a half early? No reason, just asking.

Anyway, Paul Langlois can relate. Neither vision holds meaning for him personally or for his Tragically Hip bandmates Bob Baker, Johnny Fay and Gordons Downie and Sinclaire. But Langlois says it is all the ideas that those three simple words evoke that drove the band to choose them as a title.

"I picture Music at Work, both as title of the record and song, but especially the title of the record, as sort of like, even when we're not working, we're working. You record songs and people relate to those songs, so someone can throw on the record and it doesn't take an ounce of my energy because my energy has already been put into it. That's the way I read the title, and that's one way to look at it, and I think it's why we all like it so much."

The guy seems earnest enough to trust, but wait a second . . . after having worked on this album since September 1999 and touring in support of it since its June release, when exactly does this band truly just kick back and let the catalogue carry the load? Langlois laughs.

"Our music works for us, even though, yes, you're right, we do tour a lot."

Pragmatism and a proper attitude are the keys, he says. The band makes sure to schedule regular two and three-day sanity breaks for flying home and reminding them about normalcy, which in turn reminds them of how good they've got it. "What we do within the Hip is our work, but it's really enjoyable and we're lucky to enjoy our work."

To look at 'em, you'd never guess the Tragically Hip are Canada's premier rock band.

They really are lucky for that. Since October and continuing through to the end of the year, the Hip have scheduled their live dates as "An Evening with," a twist which, though their fans might welcome it, greatly increases their workload. Langlois confesses that his earliest feelings regarding the idea were not all positive, but it only took a couple of shows to get him in favour.

"The first couple of gigs [illegible] were looking at it as a kind of marathon, or at least I was [illegible] basically, it comes down to [illegible] two sets instead of one, probably about 10 songs more than usual.

"We did it in our early days," he says, adding that now, with so much more material to cover, being the entire evening's entertainment actually gives them more room to move. "There's more room for songs and less pressure [illegible] and there's maybe a relaxed feeling that is taking over. With one set, which we've done for a long time, we've just always naturally attempted to build, build, build and peak towards the end. With the two sets, it feels like there's more time and more room to [illegible] it more of a trip, cover more ground and range of moods.

"It's been good, trying to find a song that we haven't toured with in a while and the fact that we've got a whole whack of new [illegible]," Langlois says. "The [illegible] lists and the changing of [illegible] lists has been enjoyable. We've always changed the set lists [illegible] with two sets we can [illegible] songs in two nights and still [illegible] what we think are good nights. It's enjoyable."

It's not easy being Steelie

BY SCOTT SHARPLIN

You'd think it would be a disorienting time to be a part of King Cobb Steelie, but Kevin Lynn sounds like he knows exactly which way is up. On top of releasing their first album in three years, the Guelph, Ont. dub-rock band has just recently changed labels, revolutionized their music-making techniques, and shrunk from a sextet to a trio. Yet bassist Lynn, who's been along for nearly the whole ride since Steelie's inception in 1992, maintains that the band is evolving exactly as it should.

"I feel it's been totally constant. We've managed to survive many ups and downs because our band is a democratic one. Not only is the creative process collaborative, but we try hard to maintain everyone's happiness." As of this year, "everyone" includes Lynn, vocalist Kevan Byrne, and drummer Michael Armstrong, although Lynn mentions "a lot of guests" on the new album and the current Canadian tour.

The album, entitled Mayday, follows up King Cobb Steelie's '97 release Junior Relaxer with a more pop-focused sound. Lengthy electronic dub-fests have given way to shorter, sample-based pop pieces like Lady Toronto and Home.

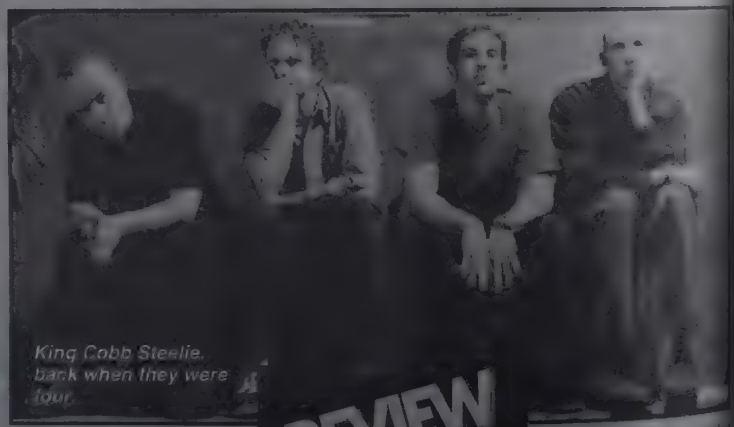
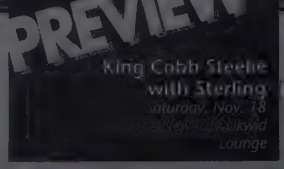
"It took us a long time to arrive at the right sound," says Lynn, who describes Mayday's music as "a beat-oriented approach . . . more sample-heavy, loop-heavy."

The loops grew out of what was, for Lynn and company, a whole new style of music-making. "It's great that you can pretty well construct entire songs on your computer at home. Mike would write a loop and pass it to Kevan, who'd add something on and pass it to me . . . it's a really handy way to work on stuff." It was not without its drawbacks though. "Kevan had his hard drive blow up. Like, literally blow up. We lost a lot of material."

It may have been this technological trauma that provoked a change in Byrne's lyrics – or it may have been something closer to home. Not even Lynn can say for sure. "They're less political, more intensely personal. I'm always trying to figure them out, but Kevan is closely guarded."



King Cobb Steelie, back when they were four.



Amidst the changes in line-up, sound, and lyrics, King Cobb Steelie are also coping with what may be their biggest change: a new label. Since 1994, the band was carried by EMI, who gave them start-up money for their own label, Lunamoth.

"Both the band and the label had high hopes, but it got a bit tainted," admits Lynn, "After a while they figured out we weren't the sort of band that was going to sell 100,000 copies . . . I think that was a bit of a problem for them." After Junior Relaxer, EMI grew even cooler. "They kept saying, 'We wanna keep you, but we're not sure we wanna make a record yet.' And we said to heck with that."

Now the band has settled in at Rykodisc. "We're always cautious," says Lynn, "but to be perfectly honest, they've been great. It's a small office, but they're really into the record." More importantly, they've been able to offer what EMI couldn't seem to pull off: a European release of Mayday.

But first they've got to finish renewing ties with their local fan base. "We had two Canadian tours when came out . . . one was a lot of fun, and the other kind of a letdown." This time, with the support of drummer Sam Cino and guitarist/singer Tamara Williamson, Lynn expects great things from King Cobb Steelie live. "It's been strange, starting on computer and building all the way up to something live. But it's gonna be great."

Mr. Fatboy Risin'

New REMIX writer asks musical question, 'Got Milk?'

REVIEWS BY DJ SPILT MILK

Fatboy Slim Halfway Between the Gutter and the Stars (Skint/Virgin)

Norman Cook is a man of many monikers. He used to be in English band the Housemartins, he brought house-music to the people as The Mighty Dubkats, and he was more known under the Euro-beat name Pizzaman. Then came the Fatboy. What started as a joke project to make funny party tunes to play for himself has turned into a serious thing. His latest full length, Halfway Between the Gutter and the Stars, is going to push him closer to the stars than he can imagine. With tracks to please everyone from funk-soul-brothas to 303 lovas, he picks a style that takes the best parts of his old style (big-beats with cut-up repetitive samples) and adds some new, more intelligent sounds with real lyrics.

As with any big release these days, success is guaranteed by adding guests. Raspy soul-vocalist Macy Gray kicks the funk in Love Life and brings it down toward the end of the disc with the haunting track Demons. Slim uses some vocals from Jim Morrison's American Prayer poetry album and turns it into the chilling ballad Sunset (Bird of Prey). Collaboration with artists like Bootsy Collins, Ashley Slater, Roland Clarke and Roger Sanchez round out a plethora of guest spots.

For the other five tracks, Slim relies on his own great talents filling in the gaps with the angry, preacher shouting Drop the Hate, the piano-filtered soul-big-beat-ballad Talking Bout My Baby, the sure-shot dance floor filler Star 69, and the chunky-but-slimy breakbeats of Ya Mama and Mad Flava. It's guranteed you'll be hearing this album blasting through clubs, house parties, radio stations, and car stereos everywhere from now on. If you can't beat Slim, join him.

DJ Tryptomene Drive (mixed cd)

Tryptomene has been spinning techno and acid techno in this city for more years than most people can remember. These days it seems as if his hard work and devotion are starting to pay off. His latest mixed CD features 19 tracks of slammin' bangin' tunes mashed together like only Tryptomene can mash 'em. It features tracks from labels like Cluster, Smitten, 4x4, Routemaster, X-trax, Maximum Minimum, Core, and acid techno pioneers Stay Up Forever. To add his own signature to the mix, he throws in one of his first releases on Infected U.K., Thursday. The mixing is quick, tight and next to perfect, not that anyone could expect otherwise. Techno has come a long way and I really dig the new style of funky, acid techno that is much different than the squelchy, high-pitched, screaming acid of years gone by. This disc is available from Tryptomene's newest venture — Foosh, the shop he recently opened on Whyte. Drive will take you on a "Tryp," but if you are driving while listening to it, I recommend a radar detector because this one will likely cost you a couple of speeding tickets.

Jay-Z The Dynasty Roc La Familia (Roc-A-Fella)

This album is more about Jay-Z becoming a brand-name than becoming hip-hop.

Like Hilfiger or Nike, you're paying for the logo, not the product itself. To be fair, it's not like this is Master P or Cash Money crap, but the chase doesn't sound like it was worth mangled in slapping. Jay-Z's spot at the top of the lyrical heap Proteges Memphis Bleek and Beanie Sigel and guests like DJ Clue turn in reasonable material.

The slick production never really falters either; I thought some of the pseudo-R&B choruses were a little weak, but that's a minor quibble.

But it just seems so prepackaged for your stereo pleasure. There's so much glossy exterior you barely notice how hollow this album is. Only the big band sound of 1-900 Hustler offers anything particularly original beats-wise.

Strangely, it's only the last quarter of the album that connects lyrically, culminating in the last track, Where HaveYou Been.

Up until this point, Jay-Z sounds disinterested, not asserting his voice to make himself heard over the car-bouncing bass, as if he's too far from the hassles of the street to play the belligerent nigga with conviction. Now there's emotion, even a constrained sob in his voice as he makes a plea to an absent father. But after 15 pre-sold tracks, who can tell if he isn't just trying to peddle something here too?

A voice from heaven

Oumou Sangare is one of Mali's national treasures

BY MINISTER FAUST

She has been called a diva, a word whose Latin roots mean "goddess." And with her serene beauty and her commanding, majestic and somehow alien voice, it's not hard to understand how the word applies to Malian sensation Oumou Sangare.

Your opportunity to inhabit the divine presence is nigh: the 32-year-old singer, songwriter and champion of women's rights will be at the Winspear Centre on Thursday, Nov. 23.

Sangare's music trembles and surges with classical Malian forms, particularly in strings that complement her powerful yet understated voice. Her international, intercontinental breakthrough records, Moussoulou (1991), Ko Sira (1993) and the recent Worotan demonstrate a vocality that will not be swayed or corrupted by the petty demands of global-pop. Despite trite coinages like the "Madonna of Mali" and specious comparisons to Aretha Franklin, Sangare defies comparison. It is in contrast, rather, that her radiant, sonic power is truly understood.

In Mali, Sangare has been a national treasure since age 21, owing to her embrace of Wassoulou, a folk-fusion of the Manding nation. According to her translators, her lyrics engage "the struggle of women in a male-dominated society, the conflict between tradition and modernity, the puzzling sorrows and joys of life and death."

With her on Nov. 23 will be a guitar-driven pulse from the ever-youthful 42-year-old Habib Koite. He and his group Bamada, whose recent Putumayo release, Ma Ya, has been tearing up radios across the planet, ratchet Malian folk and blues riffs with a voice that seems to breathe with all the trials of the world, yet one undiminished, undeterred. To hear Koite is to know the meaning of the word defiant, perhaps because his ethos descends from an eight-century-old griot tradition in which Malian court bards recorded the histories of the empire. Koite's defiance of his own mortality imbues his work with a truth and gravity that makes all the more delightful its playfulness. Originally headed for a career as an engineer, Koite's passion drew him to music — for the benefit of the world. For those unfamiliar with the glory and range of Malian music, Koite explains, "Mandinka music is based on the pentatonic scale. There were a lot of people from West Africa deported to the Americas during the Slave Holocaust, and these people mixed with other people over the years. At first they continued to play their own music, and it evolved with time to give 'the blues scale' . . . So sometimes I hear the sound of West Africa in Western music."

Oumou Sangare, who has enchanted audiences around the world, will be Edmonton next week.

That bridging of worlds is invoked in lyrics in which Koite sings of "the evolution of men in time, my country facing technological progress, and the sadness of my culture slowly losing itself."

Nearly a decade ago, Koite's new group Bamada won first prize at the Perpignan Voxpole Festival and the prestigious Discovery of 1993: Madia [illegible] Award from Radio France International, leading to the début album Moso Ko which went straight to the top of the European World Music Charts, and quickly hailed as one of the discoveries of the year by music critic Charlie Gillet. The result has been Koite's mega-stay status across the European festival circuit and the album Ma Ya which was No. 1 on the European World Music Charts for three months.

Guests vote to stay on island

BY WARREN FOOTZ

Victoria is never looked on as having a music scene worth writing home about. That's only a view from afar though, according to the Special Guests' bass player Jocelyn.

"It's quite a good music scene, there's quite a few new things happening."

The Special Guests are what's happening. What began as a summer fun band for three high school friends and a cousin has become a hot item with a six album deal on the largest independent record label in the country.

Jocelyn's evolution to becoming a bass player in a rock band is an interesting story in itself. Originally trained on piano and classical guitar, with a classical career planned out, Jocelyn's eyes were opened to other possibilities in high school.

"I wanted to play in the jazz band. I figured it (bass) is like a guitar and I ended up really liking it. I like being in the rhythm section. Being pitch and rhythm at the same time just suited me."

Much to the chagrin of her parents.

"That was a bit of a shock for them, but they're a hundred per cent behind us."

Obviously that parental support has been justified by the way the band has worked to make the Special Guests a career with a future. That began with an EP, Everybody Rock, recorded on the Island in 1998, and now an album, their first for Song Corp., the label formerly known as Attic Records.

For a band in the making, they have a real healthy attitude, an understanding of what they do making music with a definite goal

"We really value a good song song that you can dance to and hum along but still have substance both musically and lyrically that may not be evident the first time around, but if you listen to it more and more, it has a bit of a lasting power. That's our ideal."

The Special Guests look almost old enough to get into the venues they play.

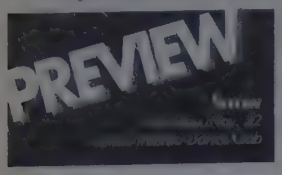
A kinder, gentler Snow

BY OLAV ROKNE

I was 18 when I saw Snow for the first time. My friends had to drag me to see his concert. By the end of it, I had bought Twelve Inches of Snow, his debut album, and he had signed it "keep it reel 4 ever."

It's six years later, and I'm speaking to him in person. Snow (whose real name is Darrin O'Brian) is smoking a cigarette, a Player's Ultra Light.



"I'm trying to quit," he says of the smokes. "It's kind of like the alcohol, I used it as a crutch when I was younger, but now I've cleaned up my life. I have a beautiful daughter, my life is going well, and I don't need alcohol or cigarettes anymore."

He is a changed man from the artist best known for his hit Informer. The anger is gone; he's soft-spoken and humble, at least toward interviewers. He credits his daughter Justuss for the change.

"She's inspired me to be a better person, so that I can be a better dad," he grins. "She also sings backup vocals in part of the new album."

Snow's latest effort, Mind on the Moon, is a worthy follow up top Twelve Inches; it's finely crafted, nuanced, and catchy. His aim is blatantly more populist this time around. Between the crooning vocals, and slick mixing, Snow sounds like the sixth Backstreet Boy.

"We brought in Mike Tucker, who had produced albums for Britney Spears, 'NSync and the Backstreet Boys. We didn't go to him and tell him, 'we want it to sound like this;' we just knew that he would give the album a good, clean sound, and that it would be my sound. He's a genius."

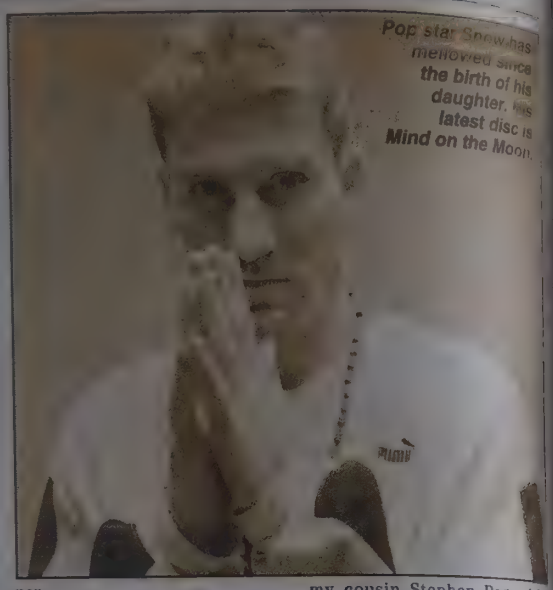
It's a sound that's working well for Snow, providing him with Everybody Wants to Be Like You, his first bona fide hit in seven years.

"I've never enjoyed recording an album as much as I enjoyed this one, and that comes through in the quality of material we put together — at least I know it passes muster with the only critic who matters... Justuss likes this disk a lot better than any of my previous ones."

Snow will be making his motion picture debut this spring in A Prison Song in which he'll play a prison guard.

"I didn't need to research the role — I spent two years observing prison guards from the other side of the bars, I know how to act like one, so when I got the opportunity to be in this film I jumped on it."

But his movie début is no Cool as Ice. He shies away from the obvious comparisons to Vanilla Ice or Eminem, stating quite clearly that he is not, and has never been a rapper.



Pop star Snow has mellowed since the birth of his daughter. His latest disc is Mind on the Moon.

"I sing something between reggae, pop and hip-hop. Compare me to the Barenaked Ladies. They sing a cover of Informer in concert, and my cousin Stephen Page, [the Barenaked Ladies' lead singer] recently told me that without Informer, he would never have written One Week."

The pride of Canada's blues scene

As the song says, Donnie "Mr. Downchild" Walsh, founder-guitar-harmonica player of Canada's venerable Downchild Blues Band, does have everything to boast about — more than 30 years of fronting the band, more than 100 original songs, more than 20 radio and TV performances, 18 albums, 14 awards plus over 80 members in and out.

Walsh jokes that it took him two decades to find the right musicians for the band, but he seriously claims this version to be his favourite. "... This current line-up of the band is fabulous, great players... real pros, ya know. Everyone gels along real well, musically and off-stage, and that's very important. I mean, it's been like this for 10 years now and we're all still alive!

"It's the same line-up as when I played Edmonton last time: Chuck Jackson singing, Pat Carey on horns, Michael Fonfara on keyboards, Gary Kendall on bass and Jim Casson on drums."

While there may have been a lot of players through this veteran Canadian blues band, it happened over the course of 20 years. "... We sat down about two months ago and really went through it. Pat knew some I couldn't remember, Kendall remembered some I'd forgot — we just kept going and going and came up close to 90," says Walsh.

As one could imagine, the list of people Walsh has worked with reads like a who's who of the Canuck music scene. Kenny Neal sang and played guitar with him before launching a healthy solo career; keyboardist Gene Taylor went on to the Blasters and the Fabulous Thunderbirds; Dave Woodward moved to Vancouver and joined the Powder Blues Band.

Buddy Guy and James Cotton both sat in with Downchild in the early days, when they played Grossman's Tavern in Toronto in the '70s. Other players who got turned on to this and came to jam with the band were John Lee Hooker, Albert Collins, Robert Lockwood Jr., Johnny Shines, Roosevelt Sykes, Rick James and Luther Allison. Bands who wanted Downchild on their gig included B.B. King, Muddy Waters, Albert King, Delbert McClinton, Junior Wells, the Nighthawks, Johnny Winter, ZZ Top, Mike Bloomfield and Taj Mahal. Spencer Davis produced a Downchild album, and Daniel Lanois was the engineer and back-up singer on three early Downchild recordings.

The celebrity who was of utmost importance to Walsh's career may have been actor Dan Ackroyd. It was at Grossman's with Walsh when Ackroyd first began to play harmonica; and Downchild was the impetus for Ackroyd to form the Blues Brothers with John Belushi. The Blues Brother released the album Briefcase Full of Blues in 1978, and two Walsh's songs, Shotgun Blues and I Got Everything I Need (Almost), were on it, as well as Downchild's swing version of Flip, Flop and Fly.

"Dan Ackroyd was doing theatre in Toronto, which ends earlier than clubs. So, Danny would come down and sit in on harp, they all liked the band and would come down with him. Dan also had an after-hours club —aka booze can — called the Five-oh-Five. Then of course he went down to New York, and Belushi, who he knew from Chicago, also went to New York. Dan turned Belushi on to Downchild via the Straight Up album. When it came time to record, they knew our tunes and liked them.

"It was good for me, totally... The Blues Brothers album was the biggest thing to ever happened to blues in terms of crossing over to the white market, huger than Paul Butterfield or Johnny Winter ... it was a great concept," he says.

The Downchild Blues Band will raise the roof at Cook County Saloon (8010-103 St.) this Thursday, Nov. 16. Tickets are $10 in advance at the club, $12 at the door. Doors are at 7 p.m., show starts at 9 p.m. with the Jim Guibosh Band opening, and Downchild on at 10 p.m. Call 432-2665 for more info

FAQ
FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

Name: Cynthia Horton

Known for: Singing/songwriting/playing bass and guitar with Edmonton acts like the Hootin' Annies, High Strung and Triplecats.

Next gig: Thursday, Nov. 16 at Longriders (11733-78 Street) for the release of her solo, independent CD, Queen Of Broken Rules.

Influences: Willie P. Bennett is my hero. I'd also count Townes Van Zandt, Guy Clark and Rosanne Cash in there. The songwriters are the ones that do it for me. I also like the pickers like David Grisman, Bela Fleck and David Anger.

Best party: That would be a big keg party I attended a couple of years ago. It took place in a huge barn. We ate a bunch of bear meat. There was mud all over the floor and that mixed with a lot of spilled beer, so when it came time to swing your partner, people were falling down all over the place.

Favourite hang-out: In the kitchen with friends and family playing music.

Humbling experience: Slinging beer to make money and having to clean the toilets at the end of the night.

Favourite teacher: Mr. Kenakin. He was the science teacher at Lorne Akins Jr. High (in St. Albert). He did Ukrainian dancing for us and he allowed the students to keep the strangest creatures in the classroom.

What do you want to be when you grow up: Happy

Most important thing ever learned: Enjoy the small things like the wind on my cheek and the sun on my shoulders.

Favourite winter things: Skiing, tobogganing and skating. I like winter. I'm a prairie gal.

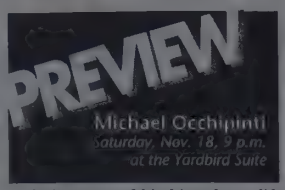
THE WORLD'S BEST MUSIC STORES

Occhipinti comes west

BY PETER NORTH



Touring extensively behind a new release is rarely the order of the day for many of Canada's best jazz musicians, but Michael Occhipinti's current swing across western Canada is a welcome exception to that rule.

The Toronto-based guitarist and bandleader has just released an interesting collection of Bruce Cockburn compositions, all hung on fresh arrangements and presented with interesting combinations of instrumentation. The end result is that Creation Dream, as an overall piece of work, gives well-worn Cockburn pieces like Lovers in a Dangerous Time, Wondering Where the Lions Are, Lord of the Starfield and Rocket Launcher new legs. It's also refreshing that Creation Dream, thanks to the major injection of creative inspiration from everyone involved, escapes being tagged as yet another one of those "tribute" albums where blueprint readings of fine songs never quite catch the spark of the originals.

"This project happened quite naturally," begins Occhipinti over the phone from Toronto a few days before heading west for a two-week run of shows.

"We had signed with True North and Bernie Finklestein, who owns the label and manages Bruce Cockburn, still loves to come out and hear music. He'll show up at the darkest little pub to catch what you're doing and one night he heard us doing Bruce's Nothing But a Burning Light. The suggestion about doing a jazz instrumental album of Bruce's tunes was made," continued the guitarist, who obviously bit.

Shortly thereafter Occhipinti and his band worked up a version of Rocket Launcher, and that also went over well with audiences. From that point on it was a matter of picking material from a rather large and very impressive repertoire.

"I tried to find a way to bridge his whole career. One of the parameters was that the choices would include some of his hits, done differently, with us putting a personal spin on them," says Occhipinti .

Occhipinti heard Homme Brulant as a jazz tune, while Mistress of Storms whirls out of its familiar orbit via some wild clarinet excursions courtesy of Don Byron. The New York reedman also added his identifiable sound on two other tracks, Rumors of Glory and Rocket Launcher.

"Don always insists that the music goes somewhere new, so the record is actually a starting point," says the leader who will be bringing trumpeter Kevin Turcotte, bassist Andrew Downing and drummer Barry Romberg with him for the tour.

Those three, plus former Cockburn sidemen and collaborators violinist Hugh Marsh and pianist Jonathan Goldsmith, also participated.

"We also cut an 11-minute version of Up On a Hillside with Bruce on dobro that didn't make the album," added the man who is also the co-leader of NOJO, which turned in one of the more memorable performances at Jazz City 2000.

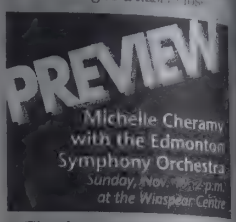
So now the focus is to turn audiences onto this music in live settings and generate some decent sales. Considering Cockburn has such a loyal following across the nation, one would think Occhipinti should be able to lure some of those fans to this series of shows, which will be extended by a run through the Maritimes at the end of November.

Tickets for the Michael Occhipinti show on Saturday, Nov. 18 at the Yardbird Suite are a most reasonable $8 for members and $12 for guests.

20th-Century classics featured

BY JERRY OZIPKO

Lovers of 20th century classical music take note — this weekend's offering by the Edmonton Symphony Orchestra in its Symphony on Sundays concert series will be the only program totally comprised of music composed during the century now coming to a hasty [illegible]



The four works on the program are as diverse as they are important. The concert opens with the world première performance of Shadows and Light, the first official commission by the ESO of its newest composer-in-residence, Alan Gilliland. In the accompanying program notes, Gilliland describes parts of the work as minimalist.

Next comes French composer Jacques Ibert's tantalizing Flute Concerto (1934), performed by Michelle Cheramy, the B.C.-born flautist who was the first prize-winner of the ESO's Canadian Concerto Competition during the first rESOund Festival of New Music a couple of years ago. Her performance here is part of her first prize award.

Cheramy has developed a special interest in the performance of flute music by 20th century composers because "the flute, wind instruments in general, don't have the depth of repertoire that the piano or string players do. We do have some great repertoire from the Baroque period and the early Classic period, but then there is a bit of a dead space in the 19th century where we don't have a lot of great works."

She went on to lament the fact that most of the solo flute music written during the latter part of the 19th century tended to be superficial, technical displays of virtuosity.

"Some of our best repertoire is from this century — the 20th century. In the case of new, newer music, I think I'm just fascinated by the idea that I might find the next Beethoven or the composer that's really worth promoting or encouraging."

Cheramy says that the contemporary repertoire allows her to explore the flute's various interesting palette of sounds and tone colours. She splits her time between performing and teaching duties at Memorial University in St. John's, Nfld.

Sunday's concert closes with the rarely performed Vetrate di chiesa (Church Windows) by Italian composer Ottorino Respighi.

Sexton celebrates slip-ups on Wonder Bar

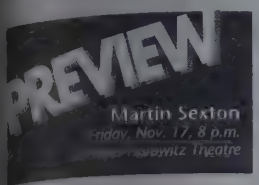
BY SCOTT LINGLEY

Singer-songwriter Martin Sexton has learned to live with his mistakes. In fact, he's come to love the little imperfections that he says impart something intangible to his latest album, Wonder Bar.

Y'see, he was at Bearsville



Studio in Woodstock, New York, where he'd retreated to cut the tracks for Wonder Bar with his usual drummer, Joe Bonadio, and studio aces Tony Levin on bass and David Sancious on keyboards.

"His first night there he wrote the song Real Man and felt a burning need to get it on tape. So he rehearsed it until his throat was raw from singing, then decided it was time to lay one down.

"When I cut the vocal on it — it's the only track on the record where the vocal isn't just live with the rhythm tracks — I couldn't really play piano and sing live, I couldn't get it right," Sexton recalls from a Minneapolis hotel room. "And it was funny, there are all kinds of vocal imperfections in that, which, at first glance, I wanted to go back and punch in this and that line because it sounded like I need to clear my throat.

"Then I thought, 'Aw, fuck it — it's cool, it fits the vibe.' This guy's been through all this shit and he's still grateful for the experience."

The tendency to pursue the right feel, rather than the most technically perfect take, characterizes Sexton's esthetic on this outing. Not to say it didn't rub his ears the wrong way during the first few playbacks.

"It did at first, because I knew in my logical mind that, oh, that's a mistake. But then, on further listening it just sounded like a little blurt, like a little character. I dug it," he says. "Like if the vocal had a great energy to it, we kept that take, even if I sang a wrong word or played a little clam on the guitar. Somehow they worked, after I'd heard 'em a couple of times."

Sexton says the surroundings in Woodstock were conducive to being relaxed about things, which helped him make the most of his first collaboration with Levin (Peter Gabriel, King Crimson) and Sancious (Bruce Springsteen, Santana).

"It was a very great, fun experience to be in Woodstock and to work with guys who influenced me growing up, guys who I'd listened to as a kid. It was a dream come true making records at a studio where other influences made records.

"It was a dream gig — staying in this 200-year-old haunted farmhouse next to the barn where we made the record, listening to the stream every night, the tree frogs chirping and the wild turkeys. It was great."

New attitude aside, Sexton says Wonder Bar is not a huge departure from form.

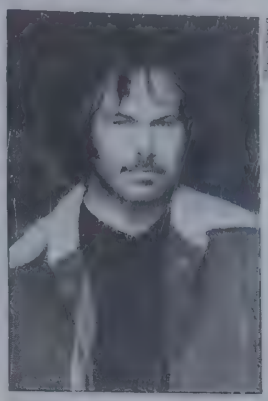
Fans of his previous albums will have no problem recognizing the expressive vocals, soulful delivery and distinctive songwriting that draws on the diversity of American popular music.

But just in case you need to hear it from the man himself.

"It's a window into a little world of home cookin', soul, and passion . . . and joy and sorrow. It ranges from joyful and playful to melancholy to sarcastic."

Martin Sexton (with drummer Joe Bonadio) plays Friday, Nov. 17 at Myer Horowitz Theatre on the University of Alberta campus.



Martin Sexton recorded his new album live off the floor and left in the best mistakes.

Hefner We Love the City (Pure)

With one remarkable, jittery single, Love Will Destroy Us in the End, Hefner distilled the twentysomething heartbreak, alienation and angst that Nick Hornby took an entire book to write about (High Fidelity). A few albums later, the band is still holding up these uncomfortable moments of indecision and emotional agony for everyone to wince at and/or empathize with. The frenetic rhythm the band specialized in is now smoothed out, but the jangly, disruptive guitars still jump out, as do the slow pulses that turn to full Velvet Underground grooves (Painting and Kissing). Hefner may now dabble in horns and piano (The Day That Thatcher Dies), but the trebly yowl that is Darren Hayman's glory still pops up occasionally. —Tom Murray

U2 All That You Can't Leave Behind (Island)

At last it can be told: U2 are dead. Mistaken for KISS by an attention-seeking Molly Ringwald fan, they were assassinated shortly after The Joshua Tree's release. Fearing a worldwide uprising, the Secret World Government suppressed the information and poured billions of dollars into a project that would combine top-secret research in robotics and Artificial Intelligence. Witness the glory of U2Perfect, v.2000! There were setbacks — both the Supreme Egomania and the Disco Virus proved problematic. Now, however, there is only a endless recombination of U2's highest ideals, those of Big Statements, EVEN BIGGER CHORUSES, and a commitment to faking passion so we don't have to. Viva U2! —Craig Elliott

Blaise Pascale Hairspray (Page Music)

In order to pass the test of pop music, at least one song has to get stuck in my head as I skip through a disc. This album passed (I can still hear 10 Feet High as I type this). If you like pop music, it has all the basic beats and simple (but not stupid) lines that are easy to remember. The songs range from fast and snappy (Order Me and Rush) to softer but still cynical (Angel Baby). The music tends to electric and acoustic guitars and loops. Pascale's lyrics speak of living between mad consumerism and raging emotional energy, with some good old angst thrown in. Like I said, if you like pop music...

—Brenna Knapman

Blur The Best of Blur (Parlophone/EMI)

Of the Brit-popper's to cross the Atlantic in the mid-90s, Blur were the ones not perpetually humping John Lennon's grave. Nevertheless, there's a mop-topped monkey on the back of any English band making good in the Colonies. And so it comes as little surprise that it's the songs that stray furthest from the Fab Four-mula that give the band its appeal, from the loopy almost-song Park Life to the cheesy disco bounce of Boys and Girls. Hardcore fans will decry the emphasis on songs that met with success outside the U.K., but it's for that reason this collection is all the Blur most will ever need. Woo-hoo.

—Adam Houston

Yanni If I Could Tell You (Virgin)

Who can know the mind of Yanni? The photos in the insert tell one story: calm, wise and knowing. But what ticks behind the facade Yanni turns to the world? The grieving countenance of the soon-to-be divorced consort of Linda Gray? The tortured genius who harnessed the synthesizer in ways only Rick Wakeman could possibly understand? And the music; shall we speak of that? Majestic, triumphant, soothing and yet bittersweet, waves of pure manna only a son of Greek gods could produce. Miracles of sound bringing peace to troubled nations, healing embittered lives. A dichotomy? Possibly; but not unlike the dynamics that produced that other figure of critical historical importance: Meat Loaf! —Tom Murray

Alive and Well Way Out East (Perimeter Records)

It's a formidable choice, I believe, to play as part of a bass-drums-saxophone trio, for the space between the sensuous restraint of a Joe Henderson trio and the fury of Charles Gayle's is filled waist-deep with mediocrity. Being a mediocre sort myself, I don't dislike this album: the original pieces don't sound out of place among the Strayhorn and Monk (et. al.) covers; the recording quality is first-rate and the work of bassman Skip Beckwith is exceptional. Ultimately, the music sounds like the all-too-familiar gasp and retreat of someone that looks down and realizes they are standing a little too close to the edge.

—Dr. Sean Sanders

SpiN of the week!

R.L. Burnside Wish I Was in Heaven Sitting Down (Fat Possum/Epitaph)

Dragging the weight of 73 years of hard living, R.L. Burnside has every right to yearn for a comfortable spot to kick back in the afterlife. Pre death, however, he continues to expand the genre with a sacrilegious marriage of rough-edged Delta blues and ambient electronica. The haunting, elegiac strains of his weathered voice and mournful string-bending are perfectly complemented by subdued post-production remixing that reinvigorates a foundational musical style. Close-minded purists may cry all over their Robert Johnson records, but those who appreciate innovation know that Burnside is God. —Dave Alexander

Kung Fu Grip, or whatever they'd prefer to be called, play the Rev on Thursday, Nov. 16 with Limblifter.

SCENE Music

Band airs Kung Fu gripe

Guitarists Jason Murphy and Duncan Turner of Kung Fu Grip are shaking their heads at the state of affairs which has caused their band to be saddled with a name they are not pleased to have. A small mention in an issue of campus paper The Gateway a few weeks ago had the band suggesting that their next show might be the last time they'd play as Kung Fu Grip. So why did they take the name in the first place?

"We had a show booked, and we were in the same predicament that we're in now, that we can't agree on anything. We needed a name to put on the posters. (Ex-King Lettuce singer) Brian Toogood suggested it to Duncan or Steve, and we were like, 'Yeah, all right, sure. Sounds okay for now.' It's four years later and we still have it. It's something we've been thinking about for years now, and always complaining about. But we never do anything about it."

Formed in July of 1996 as a musical outlet for Murphy and drummer/vocalist Steve Derpack (also of Mollys Reach), Kung Fu Grip very quickly turned into one of the finer, if less hyped, rock bands in the city. Purveying a brand of collegiate pop-punk not unlike Superchunk or Archers of Loaf, the band has hewn to an idiosyncratic style that has carved them a niche in Edmonton's underground music scene. From the start, the nature of the group dictated that they would be held back by outside concerns; bassist/vocalist Mark Simpson is an assistant professor at the University of Alberta, Murphy a mechanical engineer. Turner (who also spent time with Pal Joey and Nowhere Blossoms) and Derpack hold down day jobs that demand too muchof their time for them to make a serious run at music. But Murphy is sanguine about the group's slow forward motion.

"We just enjoy playing," he shrugs. "For me, at least, it's the creative outlet that I don't get in my job."

With plans to record in January, adding to the eight songs already in the can, the band hope to release another recording soon. In the meantime, the band will continue ambling at their own pace, arguing over a name change, and picking up new converts at each show.

Kung Fu Grip appears Thursday, Nov. 16 at the Rev with Limblifter and the [illegible] Guests.

Generica kicks it Mandarin-style

Wayne Arthurson, ex-drummer for local punk favorites [illegible] and current skin beater for the up-and-coming Generica, is [illegible] fully describing the two years that lead him to [illegible] Mandarin Chinese backup vocals for his new group's songs.

"About a half to two-thirds of the songs are in Mandarin. Yan Shi, our guitarist, just came over from China to study music here and that's the language he sings in. There's an underground punk scene over there, and Yan is part of it. We learned some lyrics so that we could sing harmonies with him."

Grant MacEwan students Yan and Alan Harding (bass/vocals) teamed up with Arthurson during the summer to run over a [illegible] original songs; the band built up a set of untitled tunes and ended up switching instruments in the true spirit of punk. It was that sense of whimsy that compelled the band to choose their name.

"...We have three ska songs, called Ska 1, Ska 2, and Ska 3. Alan sings three songs that we call Alan Song 1, Song 2, Song 3. They're all generic titles. We sound like everybody; I mean, punk rock is punk rock. We have some fast songs, we have some slow songs. We play old school punk, and some ska songs. That's why we're called Generica."

Arthurson himself is not so easily pegged. Along with his musical endeavors, he's managed to cobble together a pretty good writing career. He has one published novel (Obit), a series of articles in magazines such as Writer's Digest and Canadian Living, and a short story that just won him first prize in the Alberta Views story contest.

So Arthurson is content with a life that allows him to pursue two of the things that make him most happy. And he's more than happy to join in the fun of swapping instruments on stage, so for the first time he can sing and play guitar on one of his own songs. Arthurson is both proud and bashful about this opportunity; he chuckles at his bandmates' willingness to experiment.

"Well, they don't know any better — that's why they're letting me do it."

Generica plays Tuesday Nov. 21 with Almost Nothing, Simbiosis, Politely and I/O at the Rev Cabaret, and on Friday, Nov. 24 at Sweet Rocks.

Beauty meets beast at this pageant

By CHRISTINE CHOMIAK

Oh the life. Starting off the day with a hot bath and massage, then after each hair is in its proper place, lounging around with the competition until it's time to strut your stuff in front of the judge. Pageants can be such a meat market.

Making your way to the Agricom last week, you would have seen many coifed cattle chewing their cud waiting for that time to shine in the ring. Farmfair brought many breeds from around Western Canada to centre stage to compete for the blue ribbon in their classes as well as the coveted Supreme Champion title.

If you are city folk, you could be asking yourself, what makes a championship animal? Judge and Angus breeder Dawn Wilson first looks at the bovine's structure.

"Then we look for all the extras," says Wilson, "whether they're thick and long and deep, and a champion on top of all that has that little extra something. It's like people who have confidence or they have that little extra about them that makes your head turn when you walk by. It's no different in people in cattle."

Grooming the bovine beauty plays an important part in the overall look of the animal. The cattle are washed daily, then blown dry. The animal goes into the trimming chute and its hair is clipped to enhance its features. And like all shows, be it human or bovine, hair fixaffs play an important role.

"We put glues on the animals — like a heavy duty hairspray, and we put that in wherever we want more of something," says Wilson. "It's the same as in our own hair. We'll put in whatever it takes to make it look better."

And, like the human trend of excessive teasing and backcombing hair for competition, "the big ball on the tail is gone. It's the same as the hairstyles with people. It changes as things progress and that's one fad that's gone out," adds Wilson.

Just as with human pageants, it takes months to prepare for competition. Doug Allen of Allencroft Angus of Taber begins the long task in the spring.

"We start looking at the calves that have potential, like how their skeletal development is, how rapidly they're growing. We're looking for an animal with lots of body length to it, good muscle pattern, and a good rear quarter. These are all essential aspects for the beef industry if you want to produce beef."

Then the work begins to quiet the calf. "As long as you have treated the animals properly, with respect, and halter break them in the same manner, they respond. If you get nasty with them, they hate it, just like people," says Allen.

As in every beauty pageant, extra attention must be paid to the contestant's derriére.

"A good hair coat is essential to a fall show, so you're starting to look at maybe getting the animals to grow a little more hair," adds Allen, "so you have something to work with your clippers. You get into the actual show season, you start clipping the hair to enhance all the good features of the animal, a straight top line and a big meaty butt."

But unlike human beauty pageants, there is no real worry of eating disorders among the losers or low self esteem for having an ample rear end. The animals are fed and watered to round out any hollowness before entering the ring. And they're well-rested before competition.

Both Allen and Wilson say that championship cattle love the attention. "Can you imagine having someone massage you all day long, wash your hair?" Says Wilson, "It's the same as getting pampered in a salon. It's a good deal. They love it."

Hilarity, kabuki abound in Men of Honor

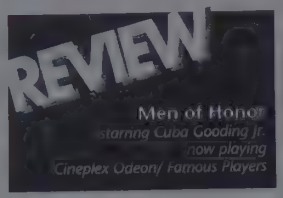
BY KEVIN X. WILSON

You may have seen a trailer for Men of Honor. You may already know that it's based on the story of Carl Brashear, the son of a sharecropper who joins the navy in the 1940s; that Brashear is determined to fulfill his father's edict to make something of himself; that he wills himself to become the first African American U.S. navy diver, despite the brutal racism he faces; that he doggedly pursues his dream even after becoming prematurely disengaged from one of his bodily appendages. You might even know that Brashear (Cuba Gooding Jr.) faces his greatest challenge in the person of tough-as-rusty-nails dive master Billy Sunday (Robert De Niro). If you know this much, you can probably figure out the rest.



Well, here's something you don't know, something that makes this film unique among military dramas. It's a musical. There's no singing or dancing, mind you, but you can expect to hear all your favorite tunes from the sound-alike canon of American symphonic film scores. You'll hear Thinking Hard. That's the number they always play when the protagonist faces a dilemma — one that he can resolve only by furrowing his brow and enduring a lingering close-up. And you'll enjoy the perennial crowd-pleaser Moments of Dark Anxiety/Joyful Triumph more than once. More than once each half hour, to be precise.

The technicians and public relations experts who assembled Men of Honor offer you this hit parade because they don't want you to miss anything. They're worried that you might be a bit dim, and they've got a pretty good idea about what they want you to think. It's for the same reason that they've hired actors who specialize in making meaningful faces. Gooding (a future poster boy for ham) and Charlize Theron (playing Sunday's long-suffering wife) excel at this. They've committed much of their inestimable ability to manufacturing unmistakable expressions — so much, in fact, that neither of them manages to convincingly convey an iota of actual human feeling.

Surprisingly, nobody takes the expression "pulling faces" more to heart than De Niro, who compulsively yanks the corners of his mouth downwards to convey a range of emotions, spanning everything from disgusted anger to angry disgust. Eventually the whole thing degenerates into a kind of grotesque American kabuki. When Sunday (bitter contempt) and Brashear (grim determination) settle a bar bet, staring each other down from inside diving helmets that are slowly filling with water, the film reaches an unintentional comic zenith.

Cuba Gooding Jr. stands up to Robert DeNiro's scowlin Men of Honor.

If the filmmakers had devoted less time to turning the obvious into the painfully explicit, they might have had half a chance to save all their hard work from turning into farce. Perhaps they didn't have time to watch it when it was finished. How else can you explain a ludicrous scene like the one in which Sunday commandeers a military courtroom to bark orders at a diving-suited Brashear as he clumps across the floor like the creature from the black lagoon?

Brashear's story probably deserves better, because his tenacity is as thought-provoking as it is inspiring. Our hero put his head ahead of his family: when does perseverance, which we celebrate, turn into pathological monomania? Naturally, that kind of question is too untidy for a film that thumps its chest hard enough to collapse a lung. It's the kind of question that only gets asked in movies made by men and women of honour.

prevail. Ties might play all right to namby-pamby Canadians, but in America,

Arnold Schwarzenegger realizes he's chosen the wrong optometrist in his latest action spectacle, The Sixth Day.

On The 6th Day, God made Arnie

BY FISH GRIWKOWSKY

Next time I go to the Vancouver Public Library I'm gonna Ron Jeremy their evil asses. You see, more than a movie, The 6th Day is a big travel pamphlet for Vancouver, B.C. You can see the faded Expodome during the key action sequences, there's a chopper-port in Stanley Park and, yes, the bad guys' genetic laboratory is actually the basement of the central library, designed by the same man who brought us Habitat '67 at Expo '67.

But what is this, an architecture column? Well, there's a good reason we're straying from discussion of the film. It's almost insulting to your intelligence to talk about it, see.

So The 6th Day is a pretty bad film, at best okay concept explored with more intelligence in films like Dead Ringers, Blade Runner and Star Wars Episode II: Attack of the Clones. Tweety's Many Dinks, T6D is not all bad, perhaps, as the trailers make it seem, but somehow drives home the point that we don't want any more muscular heart-surgery surrogate overseas heroes in this decade.

Set in the near future but filmed in the past for the point of distraction in 1999 Vancouver, The 6th Day gives us Arnold Schwarzenegger as Adam Gibson, an aging Rain Forest War vet and commercial chopper-plane pilot who seemingly attracts constant reminders that he lives in the future in the same way Maxim magazine attracts the masturbation set. The dynamics of their present is all anyone around him talks about. His chatty fridge reminds him to get milk, which he orders with a touch of a button. His TV begs him to buy his daughter a robot playmate (who looks frighteningly retarded). His buddy Hank (Michael Rappaport) talks about his virtual fuck hologram and cloned pets, while the minivan does all the driving automatically through Stanley Park.

Yeah, okay, we get the idea already. You go get a space coffee and read the virtual newspaper while I go take an e-dump: sheesh! This may seem like a snotty aside, but there are subtle ways to express it's the future, like the rusty old 2000 Beetle during a parking lot fight scene, which was good. Show us, don't spurt it all over our faces.

Anyway, the tension in the film is supposed to come from the fact that there's a big conspiracy to clone human beings. But, of course, because that's too subtle, Drucker (Tony Goldwyn), the billionaire behind the project, is of course a conscienceless prick, who himself turns out to be a clone.

Owing to a wacky mix-up, Hank and Adam (first man, har har), are both cloned by Drucker's sinister corporation. Adam Gibson arrives home after waking up passed out in a cab to find his daughter's birthday party going on just fine without him — BECAUSE HE'S ALREADY INSIDE!!! Yeah, it was like that, but less exciting, at least until the hot chicks showed up.

This is about when the killing starts, done by a series of henchmen who laugh maniacally as they're killed off, knowing that the stakes of life are about as high as a game of Tetris. After all, they know they'll be regenerated like Doctor Who, in clone form. "Kind of takes the joy out of life," one of them comments too late in the show, something that should have been explored a little more than in Robert Duvall's brief but good segments as the morally compromised doctor behind the technology. He's the only one in the whole film who could be said to be acting in any convincing way.

The 6th Day tries too hard without enough to back itself up. There are dull, gratuitous flying scenes, a rather flat production design (save the RePet animal cloning store, which was damn well done), and a lot of elements, like religious fanaticism meeting a technological holy war, that could have been left on the floor, considering what came of them. Oh, Hollywood, why do you bother?

Yeah, sure, it's just an action movie, but so was the aforementioned Blade Runner which, more than the pitiful Total Recall, this movie made me yearn for, both thematically and in the realm of gruelling tension. This is neither dark nor humorous, insightful nor memorable; just kind of a hokey fantasy that reminds me too much of Robson Street on the way to Virgin Records in Van.

I've played video games with better plots, including Congo Bongo. Sorry, Arnie. As much as I love you ultra-right wing ass, I think your last chance may be the third Conan movie recently announced. To the theatre only then. Mr. Universe, I'll be back.

Love story takes bad Bounce

BY MARI SASANO

Let it now be said: the lives of boring people, even in extraordinary circumstances, will ALWAYS remain boring. The way they react (and they always live in reaction, rather than motivation) to the joys and pitfalls of life are textbook perfect averages, mechanical and uninspired.

REVIEW
Bounce
starring Ben Affleck and Gwyneth Paltrow opens Friday, Nov. 17
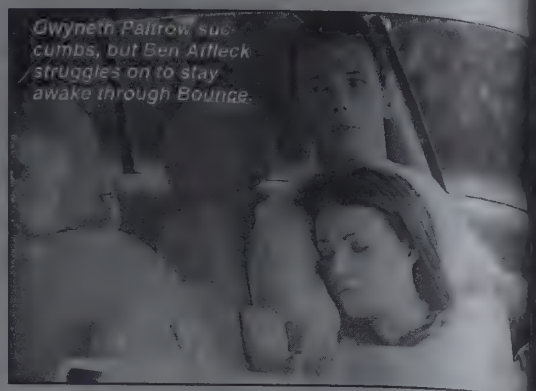
Cineplex Odeon



Gwyneth Paltrow succumbs, but Ben Affleck struggles on to stay awake through Bounce.

Bounce, the latest Gwyneth Paltrow/Ben Affleck turd created by Don Roos, the writer of the relatively intelligent The Opposite of Sex, is such a deliberation on the mediocrity of two dull-as-plants regular folk.

Affleck is Buddy, an advertising executive; predictably a cocky, arrogant asshole. We know this because he drinks too much, is loud, and also because of the overly-long establishing scenario where he planks a stranger in an airport hotel, and gives away his plane ticket to an apparently happily married man who ends up dying when the plane crashes. This time, I feel no shame in ruining THAT surprise for you because this movie is really not worth seeing.

Long (looooong..) story short, his boss makes him go into rehab, and hey, in this here AA manual it says to make amends with the people you have hurt. OK, how 'bout stalking dead guy's widow, Abby (Paltrow), and — ka-chunk, there goes the cog of bad predictable plot — falling in Love! Paltrow (looking like, if you do yoga every day, all you ever need to eat is air) is annoying. Her lip quivers, eyebrows squinch up, she acts all fake vulnerable-like. Ben also has nothing to recommend him. They make him cry a bit but you start to kind of enjoy it after a while.

Unlike most, I really believe it when Ben and Gwyneth say they are no longer an item. No chemistry, no passion, nothing to see. To be fair, they are forced to play totally uninteresting, unlikable characters. Instead of personality, they have tics —Abby likes baseball! Buddy likes dogs! They're nice! Sorry, but nice does not an interesting love affair make. Abby's reaction to her husband's death is like some kind of Oprahfied composite of grief: the expected levels of sadness, guilt, regret. Outbursts by rote from the pages of Kubler-Ross. Same with Buddy, whose heartlessness [illegible] too easily overcome by the [illegible] charm of Abby's down-home, [illegible] nary weaknesses.

Affleck has been quoted as [illegible] ing that even if this film is a [illegible] mercial failure, it is a work he particularly proud of. Sure, it [illegible] pinnacle of your acting career [illegible] far has been Armageddon and [illegible] ing an obviously fabricated [illegible] tionship with Brad Pitt's ex [illegible] wait, you might say, but he wrote the script for Good Will Hunting. Clearly, however, it's Matt Damon who's the talented one in the undynamic duo. Even a potential fun cameo by that Damn Dancer herself, Jennifer Grey, fails to cleanse the palate of the offense by Affleck and Paltrow. I can see the two of them growing up some day to become the 21st century equivalent of Demi Moore and Bruce Willis. Oh, voyagers, to [illegible] noble calling.

Barf barfity barf barf.

In pursuit of The Great Serial-killer Flick

Hanging on to the last dregs of the Halloween spirit, my friends and I found the conversation turning to serial killer flicks. We agreed that, after films like Repulsion which simply depict people going crazy, serial killer flicks had the potential to be the most disturbing, because they don't require any suspension of disbelief. But then we had to admit that in spite of that, most serial killer flicks sucked.

"But what," I asked, "about the ones that present their stories from the killer's perspective? That gives you the extra punch of being inside a crazy person's head." My coffee-quaffing chums agreed and we began brainstorming on which films did it best.

"Henry: Portrait of a Serial Killer, obviously," said one friend. "It was the first, and it was the best."

Well, John McNaughton's 1986 indie chiller is certainly one of the best, but I couldn't accept that it was the first. I think the honour there must go to Fritz Lang's M (1931), the black and white masterpiece about a child murderer on the run. Relatively little screen time is devoted to the killer, but he's played so hauntingly by Peter Lorre that you can't help but dwell on him in your mind, long after you've forgotten the supporting characters and their scenes.

Still, most viewers in search of bloody entertainment will prefer to go with Henry, and as far as serial killer P.O.V. is concerned, the film delivers the goods. We get insight into his methodology: how he picks his victims, what he does with them when he's done and how he avoids getting caught. What the film lacks is motivation for Henry. Why does he spend his life meticulously offing people? There's one intriguing scene where Henry stops his partner-in-homicide Otis from molesting a woman's dead body. Even Henry draws the line somewhere, it appears. But why there? The film is, probably deliberately, enigmatic.

On the other hand, you have a film like The Young Poisoner's Handbook (1995), which delves deep inside the mind of its disturbed young protagonist to sort out why this awkward British teen is offing his friends and family. This is one of my favourites because of its warped comic tone, which foreshadows American Psycho in a lot of ways. Here, though, you have a vivid presentation of the dysfunctional environment which drives young Graham to poison first his stepmother and then everybody else. I also like him because he's a genius, which is what all killers need to be if they hope to achieve serial status (this, by the way, is one of the reasons I hate Natural Born Killers so much. What imbeciles!).

We finished the debate by reviewing The Minus Man, which stars Owen Wilson as a boyish itinerant poisoner — a kind of fusion of the above two films, only set in David Lynch-land and featuring Janeane Garofalo. Although it sometimes strains your disbelief, I found it worked because it really makes you get to like the killer in much the same way as most of his victims do. What could be more disturbing than that?

Out-of-this-world stupidity

BY STEPHEN NOTLEY

You'd think that Mission to Mars, incredibly bad Mars movie that it was, would have cornered the market on bad Mars movies, at least this year. But Hollywood in its infinitely retarded wisdom decided that we needed two bad Mars movies, and thus, Red Planet.

Looking at the two, what springs out at you is how many different ways there are for a movie to be bad. Mission to Mars was a huge majestic failure, a film whose reach sailed miles and miles out in front of its grasp. It tried to outdo 2001, and yet it ended with a cry-ing CGI alien. It was pompous and overblown and brilliantly stupid.

Red Planet, sadly, is just a dumb, crappy movie. It's actually much closer in bad-movie feel to Supernova, another bad little sci-fi film that came out in this year crowded with bad films. Like Supernova, Red Planet has no grand dreams to bungle. It's just got a dumb story that it does clumsily.

The commercials for Red Planet show Val Kilmer being chased around by a robot dog. As it turns out, this is one of about four little plots that never add up to one big one. When I saw the commercials, I though RoboDog would get taken over by some crazy Mars nanovirus or something. Instead, he just bumps his "Kill Everybody" switch when he crash-lands on Mars. No kidding.

That's just one of the many nonsensical twists that make up the plodding, unfun sequence of events passing for a storyline. Others include the discovery of air on Mars, the mysterious disappearance of some algae, and the shocking appearance of a race of steel eating Martian . . . but I don't want to wreck the "surprise."

Even this Grade 6 science dopiness might have been watchable if there had been a couple of performances or relationships or something in there, but no dice. The only actor who seems to give a crap at all is Carrie-Ann Moss, who finds herself stuck in this techno-turkey after her appearance in The Matrix. Unfortunately, she ends up on the spaceship by herself when everybody else goes planet-side, so she's left to sweat and emote and flip switches with nobody else in the room. She looks pretty good doing it, frankly, better than she did in The Matrix, and she even acts like she believes it. She deserves better.

More than can be said for her co-stars. Terrence Stamp, [illegible] British actor [illegible] fine British actors die around the half hour mark, and so it was with Terrence. While in search of bits of glass in the garbage, he has been given to say. He explains that [illegible] while, I realized science could not answer any of the really interesting questions. That's when I became a philosopher." So what was he doing on a spaceship to Mars, exactly? Oh, that's right. Dying. Of a ruptured spleen, I guess.

Val Kilmer, meanwhile, can barely be bothered to face the camera and I can hardly blame him.

Ditto for Tom Sizemore. There are a couple of other actors in there, nobodies to a man, who die here and there in totally unmemorable ways.

Even RoboDog gets dull pretty fast and the last 20 or so minutes are a long, slow haul.

Red Planet is such a grotty little mistake that it feels somehow wrong to say it's worse than Mission to Mars, to give it that honour.

And yet watching it is unquestionably the worst experience because Red Planet doesn't even have M2M's ponderous hilarity going for it. It's just crap. Folks, we have a loser.

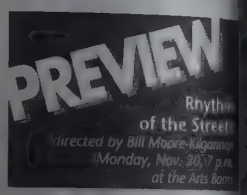
Film finds rhythm of hope

BY SOPHIE WATSON



Ah, the trials and tribulations of making a movie, then trying to get a TV deal for a documentary with a compassionate, social justice hook. Bill Moore Kilgannon's Rhythm of the Streets sidesteps the stereotypes of third-world poverty and instead offers a potent look at the possibilities that love and art can offer.

But, as Moore-Kilgannon points out, TV viewers have been inundated with too many documentaries that are designed solely to pull on heart strings and solicit money, tending to focus on the lack of power that the subjects possess. Ironically the helplessness of the people mirrors the ineffectiveness of the cliché. The ante can no longer be upped; people have seen the bloated tummies and flies in eyes of poor babies on their TV screens for years. But, at the same time, the basis of social movements is in one-on-one connections. Moore-Kilgannon's film breaks through stereotypes of hopelessness and shows us the personal within the bigger picture, ultimately revealing the beauty of solidarity, the importance of community, and the power of art.

Unfortunately the whole genre is considered a turn-off for mainstream media who generally won't touch development stories unless there is an epic disaster. And so Moore-Kilgannon persists, making calls, knocking on doors saying, "No you've gotta take a look at this-it's street kids doing music, making art, speaking up for their rights." But it is a hard sell; the NFB said the film wasn't Canadian enough, despite the Canadian girl who narrates the film and the Canadian youth featured in it.

Some regional broadcasters have come on board, but Moore-Kilgannon wants to secure a national TV station. This is his labour of love and he is determined to get it seen — not because it has cost him over $70,000 and all his free time for the past four years, but because this inspiring story of street kids in Nicaragua speaks to disenfranchised people in all cultures.

Nicaragua has a population of 4.3 million; 53 per cent are under the age of 18. The second poorest country in the Western Hemisphere, Nicaragua has a 60 per cent unemployment rate. Kids, often the only breadwinners in the family, take to the streets, selling Chiclets, washing windows, even selling themselves to get by. Many turn to glue-sniffing and crime.

Nicaragua's Institute for Human Promotion (INPRHU) is a non-governmental organization that tries to reach as many as they can of the one million kids who have no access to education or health care. Their program offers young Nicaraguans the opportunity to participate in classes and workshops in everything from personal hygiene and cooking to music and culture. Rhythm of the Streets introduces us to a handful of the kids with whom INPRHU works.

The film chronicles the benefits of social work and personalizes it in the context of the development friendships between Nicaraguans and Canadians, featuring one-on-one profiles. Moore-Kilgannon's target audience is students because, as he points out, "Oftentimes it is students who engage in critical thinking about where society is going, taking a more critical stance to the mainstream because it's a time in life when you're exploring new realities, you're given that opportunity to look at new ideas and challenge things."

Rhythm of the Streets screens on November 20 at 7 p.m. during Peace Week at the Arts Barns.

Do you have any special training techniques? Train with a tight group who push each other; always try new moves and improve weaknesses.

Before a competition, how do you get mentally prepared? A reggae tune along with visualization of my ride.

What do you consider "extreme"? Pretty simple. It's the thin line between experience and luck. If the conditions are pushing your limits and the result is based on executing a perfect run, that's extreme; if the outcome relies on some luck, then you are over your head and being extreme-ly stupid.

What's your biggest fear? At the end, feeling like I was herded through life like a sheep or cow.

What was the craziest thing you've ever done in your sport? The second descent of the "Minus Rapids" at Victoria Falls on the Zambezi River in Africa. Two ungodly gigantic rapids in sequence, that were bigger than anything we had done. Not to mention the crocs in the pool downstream!

How long can you hold breath under water? In the bath, over a minute; on the river, so far, long enough!

What is the most embarrassing moment in your sport: At one event, this guy entered pro and ended up going into the hole and swimming out of his kayak because he couldn't roll. At the awards, it was announced that he beat me and I've never heard the end of it!

What does victory smell like to you? It's always a big party, you're just the one with the money that night!

EXPORT 'A' EXTREME SPORTS SERIES

SCENE screen

Almost Famous

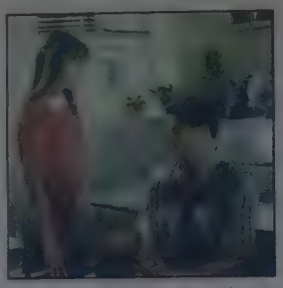
Almost Famous is Cameron Crowe's latest and most brilliant offering. It has already hailed as this year's American Beauty. Fifteen-year-old William Miller (Patrick Fugit) is a thinly-veiled young Crowe in this semi-autobiographical film of the coming of age of a teen Rolling Stone writer. William is sent on the road with Stillwater, an assignment that transforms his life. Crowe again proves himself master of memorable dialogue and creating those movie moments that stay with you forever. ★★★★★ (MS)

Bamboozled

Spike Lee is more pointedly abrasive than ever in his latest film, turning his keen eye on the insidious racism in the U.S. entertainment industry. A failing "buppy" TV producer is ordered, upon pain of termination, to come up with a "ghetto" hit. He decides to flip the bird at his bosses by producing an old-time racist minstrel revue. To his horror, the show becomes the Next Big Thing, a pop-culture phenomenon that turns blackface into a cosmetic craze. Lee delivers an incisive, daring, funny and truly painful film. ★★★★ (MF)

Bedazzled

If you've seen the trailer for Bedazzled, there it is, the movie in a nutshell, with the premise (Brendan Fraser's a nerd named Elliot, Elizabeth Hurley is the Devil), a sample wish (Elliot wishes to be rich and powerful, and ends up as a drug dealer), and the promise of six more wishes. Sounds like fun! Sounds like, but isn't. Moviegoers will, without question, get their full alottment of Elizabeth Hurley. They'll see her wearing dynamite red gowns, or little bikinis, or sexy schoolmarm outfits. Is there any reason to see this movie besides Elizabeth Hurley? The answer, sadly, is not really. ★★ (SN)



Liz Hurley tempts Brendan Fraser in Bedazzled.

Best in Show

Thematically similar to his Waiting for Guffman, Best in Show is another phony documentary from writer-director Christopher Guest which follows a group of eccentric, compassionately observed but patently ridiculous characters as they obsessively pursue some frivolous activity. Here, participants in a dog show get a tender ribbing in ingeniously improvised vignettes — by a terrific ensemble cast that includes Guest — which are all the funnier for being understated. Without a doubt, it's the funniest comedy of the year, which admittedly is no trick. Go see it anyway. ★★★★ (SL)

Billy Elliot

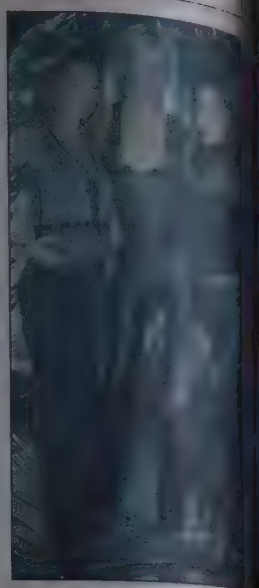
The story of a working class kid who has to get past his family's objections to study ballet avoids the usual sentimental quicksand and pontificating about everybody's secret special talent, opting instead for believable characters, nonglamorous settings, and focusing on the costs of a unique, irrepressible gift. First time director Stephen Daldry makes the you wait wit the characters for the resolutions they seek, a sure sign of respect for the audience. ★★★★ (KW)

Blair Witch 2: The Book of Shadows

What made the first Blair Witch such a runaway hit was that nothing about it was subjected to Hollywoodization, but everything in the sequel is reduced to cardboard cutouts, not the least of which being the five clichéd twenty-something protagonists. Even the "crude" video footage that reveals the terrible secret of the plot looks slick and polished. Apparently, the Blair Witch has a great rocks-and-twigs editing system. ★ (DA)

Bring It On

This Kirsten Dunst vehicle has surprising depth for a movie about cheerleaders, with sexual and racial politics getting a look in amongst the school spirit and glimpses of white panties. With some of the gosh-darnedest cheerleading you'll ever see and a message about respect across social boundaries, this was probably as good as the summer of 2000 got at the movies. ★★★★ (MS)



Charlie's Angels kick and ass in cool clothes.

Charlie's Angels

There is truly nothing more magnificent than pretty girls in Versace kicking ass. This is everything James Bond used to be, but definitely better. This is a movie that any girl would make, had she the opportunity to produce a multi-million dollar vanity project — the clothes, the fighting, the cute boys, the exquisitely-lit disco-fantasy sequences. But it also happens to be passably intelligent, hilarious, fun and beautiful. ★★★★★ (MS)

The Contender

Hollywood's ready to remind us that it's not okay to dig around somebody's bedroom just because you don't like his (or her) politics. The always-dependable Joan Allen saves this tepid low-stakes depiction of a political witch-hunt conducted by the Beltway's seedy hypocrites. The problem is, a smear campaign against a vice-presidential nominee simply because she's a woman rings too hollow to believe. Good performances, weak premise. ★★★ (SN)

Croupier

A leaden directorial hand curtesy of Mike Hodges undermines a decent concept about an aspiring writer's descent into a sleazy underworld via his job at a riverboat but suspect London casino. The indifference of the visuals and performances turns plot twists into wiggles and drain any tension that might accumulate. Too bad, the movie probably looked really good on paper. ★★ (CE)

Dancer in the Dark

Director Lars von Trier explores devotion, compassion and sacrifice through the story of Selma (Björk), an immigrant single mother working two dead-end jobs which surely exacerbate her rapidly deteriorating eyesight. But she can't quit; her son has her hereditary condition and Selma needs to save money for an operation to save his eyesight. Despite her drab life, Selma finds joy in fantasies about American musicals. Irresistible, though excruciating. ★★★★★ (MS)

SCENE Screen

Dr. T and the Women

Dr. T and the Women is everything that's wrong with Robert Altman films: unfocused, smug and shallow. Richard Gere is Dr. Sully Travis, gynecologist on the brink: his wife (Farrah Fawcett) is going crazy, his daughter (Kate Hudson) is getting married, his alkie sister-in-law (Laura Dern) has moved into his house, and he is making moves on the new golf pro in town (Helen Hunt). Women all want a piece of him, and he can't cope with all the female troubles. Unfortunately, the film's conclusion about the relations between the sexes is a little too pat and fails to deal with any real issues. ★★ (MS)

The Exorcist

Twenty-five years after its initial release, The Exorcist still blows most movies about Satanic possession out of the water. The story of an unfortunate 12-year-old girl whose body is inhabited and abused by a demon, it balances a naturalistic, character-driven approach with brutal, graphic shocks and an overarching tone of unease. And it's scary. Slightly diminished in impact from repeated imitation by lesser films, and by the questionable addition of 11 minutes to the theatrical rerelease, it's still worth your while to catch it in all its profane glory on the big screen ★★★★ (SL)

Kadosh

Set in the ultra-orthodox Jewish quarter of Jerusalem, Kadosh casts its gaze on the lives of two sisters within the community and how the dictates of their religion — which views a woman's role as the expiditer of her husband's spiritual quest — impact their lives. Beautifully photographed, enriched with believable, nuanced performances, Kadosh has all those qualities so often lacking in mainstream Hollywood fare. And while it's quite moving, Kadosh is also sort of boring, it's central conflict diminished by a failure to evoke a spiritual, rather than just a religious, atmosphere.Still, the performances and the film's luminous visuals are enough to recommend it. ★★★ (SL)

The Legend of Bagger Vance

Director Robert Redford hits a career (and perhaps lifetime) low-point with this racist, thinly-veiled metaphor for male impotence. Matt Damon plays a Southern golf pro in the '40s who has lost his "swing" (nudge-nudge, wink-wink) and is no longer able to "dance" with his girlfriend (say no more!). Will Smith plays Bagger, whose Zen-like tutelage helps Juhnuh "find his swing" again. Nostalgic for the days of yore when men were men, women were women and golf was the exlusive province of white men, Bagger Vance is one vile exercise. no stars (LW)

Legend of Drunken Master

What it lacks in rewindability, it makes up for in size. This American release of the 1994 Jackie Chan classic — mostly know on these shores in video form — won't allow you to back it up and watch the good parts again, but it will give you a big screen view of some of Chan's most brilliantly choreographed fight scenes, and that's saying something. ★★★★ (AH)

Little Nicky

Adam Sandler plays the doofus son of Satan (Keitel), who's sent to Earth to stop his brothers from destroying Hell. The "comedy" in Little Nicky has really nothing to do with characters and dialogue and everything to do with stupid sight gags, such as breasts growing out of the head of damned man or Hitler getting a pineappled shoved up his ass. If you're not a Sandler fan, this movie's a waste of time. If you are, you have your own problems to solve. ★ (SN)

Patricia Arquette tries to act not embarrassed by Adam Sandler in Little Nicky.

Lucky Numbers

What begins as pleasingly acerbic effort abruptly veers into the realm of maudlin. This caper film is at its best when the humour comes at John Travolta's expense. When his big-fish-in-a-small-pond demeanour is mercilessly mocked, the film works, but when his character inexplicably shifts from arrogant buffoon involved in a lottery scam to morally outraged hero, the bevy of other fantastic characters get shortchanged. This isn't a clever attempt to mess with audience identification; it's simply messy. ★ (LW)

Meet the Parents

It's so nice to see a comedy that avoids the potty humour [illegible] it could easily have leaped into. Once you get over the "what's Robert De Niro doing in a movie like this" thing, you'll see that this is really funny movie, slapstick [illegible] almost classical sense. You'll feel Ben Stiller's pain [illegible] from disaster to disaster while trying to impress his love's parents, while De Niro brings the Scary Dad out of the realm of cardboard cutouts. ★★★ (DS)

Nurse Betty

A typical follow-your-dreams story of a small town girl (Renée Zellweger) who leaves her oafish husband to follow her heart takes a bizarre turn under the direction of grumpy Neil LaBute (In the Company of Men, Your Friends and Neighbours). The personae of the featured players are the driving force here, with each actor playing out her/his public myth, but ramped up to a disturbing degree. The film itself thrives on never allowing its tone to be pinned down, which sees Nurse Betty veer from goofy to gory, leaving the viewer with little but the thrill of having the rug pulled out from under them. ★★ (LW)

Remember the Titans

It's a pretty good football film, but as morality play, it's problematic. Denzel Washington plays a high-school football coach leading a unwillingly integrated squad in Virginia in 1970. First he teaches the team the importance of cohesion and then the team teaches the community the importance of racial harmony. The inherent complexities of America's racial divide are so easily overcome in this movie that it's hard to believe that they're all that serious to begin with. ★★★ (CE)

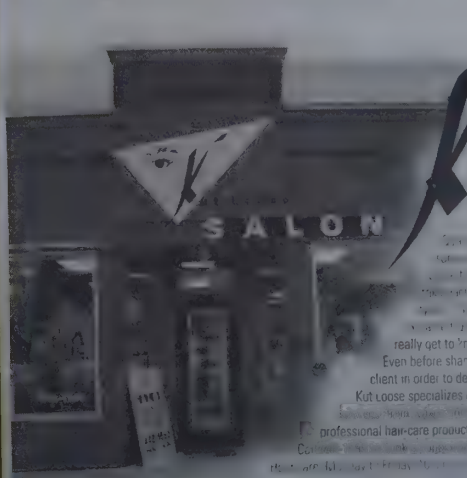
A Sweet Bowl of Sugar

[illegible] and soothing deep roast are staples of life. It's that reverence for the java bean that Abel brings to Sugarbowl, which for decades has been a fixture in Garneau.

Back in the 1940s, Sugarbowl was THE place to go for coffee and stimulating conversation in the neighborhood. It [illegible]

Born in Ethiopia, Abel [illegible] Ethiopian chain in the world [illegible] in the 1400s, and that pride and history is in his blood. [illegible] standards and when you couple that with intoxicating cinnamon buns, muffins and other dishes, you have one of Edmonton's truly great fully-licensed cafés.

Over the years, Abel has developed Sugarbowl [illegible] a place for intellectual treats, as well. Among his clientele are professors, writers, poets and artists. The ambience can't be beaten. local artists showcase their work there while live musical performers entertain on Friday and Sunday nights. A DJ provides music on Saturday evenings. It's a favorite spot for students and faculty of the University of Alberta. Come on in to Sugarbowl at 10922 - 82 Ave. and satisfy your appetite for good conversation, great food and unbeatable coffee.



The first things you notice upon entering Kut Loose are the mirrors. Of course, every salon has mirrors, but these are unique. Each of the mirrors at the six stations is custom made, as much a work of art as it is a vital tool for a hair stylist.

"I've worked very hard to make this salon unique," explained owner Quan [illegible]. We're unique and so is each of our clients. We won't let anyone come in here and feel like they're just another number.

'Low fat' dirty words in Lindsay's cookbook

BY GILBERT A. BOUCHARD

Surprisingly, Annie Lindsay, [illegible] hates the term "low-fat."

"I just wish we could find some new words," she tells me as we settle into [illegible] cosy little (six tables) storefront restaurant/tea room/bakery corner to Southgate. "It's one of the reasons I called my earlier cookbook 'smart' cooking."

Living Magazine, really doesn't like to demonize fat. "I believe in a healthy amount of fat — just enough so that it tastes okay," she says. "No-fat has given a bad name to healthy eating."

That's one of the reasons she wrote New [illegible] Canadian Cancer Society — to give people a healthier eating route that wasn't going to be just deprivation. I'd personally say she succeeded. The recipes I tried — [illegible] Easy "Isocaine" Cake with Chocolate Buttermilk Icing — were wildly rich and effortless to prepare.

"We reward and celebrate with food and [illegible] up with the experience," she notes, adding this is the main reason why any diet based on Spartan attitudes is doomed to fail.

That's also why Lindsay loves Indian [illegible] Healthy fare that's really [illegible] on the flavours. Several days later she says, she's going to write an Indian-themed cookbook. Deciding to put this declaration of fat free, we decide to order broadly across the menu, starting with a spicy curry/lentil soup then moving [illegible] with the vegetarian [illegible] more traditional in serving style than the Dossa).

"I've always cooked with lots of fruit and vegetables, always used whole wheat and always cooked from scratch. The main shift I took with light cooking was to [illegible] by changing some ingredients," she explains. "I sing buttermilk instead of cream to mash potatoes and not [illegible] a soup with a quarter cup of butter, for example. And chicken soup with extra vegetables, not flour."

As we talk we tuck into the soup which is visual embodiment of her precept — a [illegible] delicate offering, yet chock-full of lentils and packing a deep, brawny, spicy punch.

"If you make gradual changes to your diet you'll also notice less," Lindsay reminds us, as we're served the Dossa, a dish that is [illegible] by serving the spicy potato-onion [illegible] on a light, fermented crepe. We both appreciate the attention paid to the tasty dish as well as the brilliant touches, like a decadent cocon[illegible] coriander sauce that sides the entre[illegible].

Another good trick, she [illegible] based author, is to bread and [illegible] chicken (use a pan greaser [illegible] spray) rather than fry it – [illegible] old-fashioned comfort food [illegible] fraction of the fat. This [illegible] with the psychology — [illegible] taste and urge — yet meeting [illegible] ing goals.

When asked for some [illegible] or less stressful cooking. [illegible] people consider serving [illegible] foods for more casual gath[illegible] these dishes don't always hav[illegible] piping hot, thereby taking th[illegible] timing of a major meal for a hu[illegible]

The other tip? Designate a s[illegible] maker! "Making good gravy [illegible] consuming — get someone to fo[illegible] that one task."

Free Stuff

We've said it before and we're saying it again. Sometimes the best thing about Free Stuff isn't so much the Stuff as it is the Free. That's the case this week with a Hampton the Hamster Hampsterdance CD. To win, just call the SEE contest hotline at 430-9043 Friday between 1 and 1:15 p.m. and tell us the name of another popular Hamster (Hint: he has his own TV show). If our machine answers, don't leave a message. Just dial again. (You cannot win if you have won a prize from SEE in the last month.)

Okay. You aren't interested in the big Hampster craze. You could win a free double guest pass to something waaay funnier — Rapid Fire Theatre's big improv show Chimprov Saturday at 11 p.m. at the New Varscona Theatre. To win, call the SEE contest hotline at 430-9043 Friday between 1 and 1:15 p.m. and tell us the name of the Hollywood star who's really good at improv but has made a long string of bad movies, like Patch Adams, and who will make a guest appearance on Drew Carey's Who's Line Is It Anyway?. If our machine answers, don't leave a message. Just dial again. (You cannot win if you have won a prize from SEE in the last month.)

For more laughs, you could win a double guest pass to see Best in Show, starring Christopher Guest in a 'dogumentary' about dogs and their own[illegible] ers, playing at The Princess. To win, call the SEE contest hotline at 430-9043 Friday between 1 and 1:15 p.m. and tell us which band was featured in the 'rockumentary' film Guest had a starring role in. If our machine answers, don't leave a message. Just dial again. (You cannot win if you have won a prize from SEE in the last month.)

We're also giving away passes to see Robert DeNiro in Meet the Parents, playing at the Garneau. Just call SEE at 430-9043 Friday between 1 and 1:15 p.m. and tell us who co-stars with Robert de Niro in Meet the Parents. (And another thing: you cannot win if you have won a prize from SEE in the last month.)

The movie Dancer in the Dark features Bjork and is proving to be quite popular anyway. You can win tickets to this film, playing at The Princess II, by calling us at 430-9043 Friday between 1 and 1:15 p.m. and telling us the name of Bjork's homeland. If our machine answers, don't leave a message — you can't win that way. Just dial again. (And another thing: you cannot win if you have won a prize from SEE in the last month.)

THE COSMOS

WITH THE KID

FOR THE WEEK OF NOV. 16-22, 2000

Aries (March 21 - April 19)
Were you aware that there is a traitor in our midst? Someone you consider to be a friend or a close lover is secretly designing an outcome - a person that is superficially intimate and full of opportunities presented by the strategic relationship they've built. Don't worry, they'll be dealt with soon. For these situations, the Cosmos has a spoon.

Taurus (April 20 - May 20)
This week, out with the old and in with the new is the deal for you, kinda like bein' on the receivin' end of reverse dating. You'll choke a bat, spit up some and come to all dizzy with some weirdo shoe wrapped around your face. Congrats, you're breathin' again! And isn't that all that really matters at the moment?

Gemini (May 21 - June 20)
You should be happy to know that karma has declared you quite sexual. So, after a period of pain, it's time for you to actively pursue some pleasure. Whether it's of the physical, intellectual or emotional sort is entirely your decision, but frankly, a good book is as effective as cardiosol and booze. You just need some fun.

Cancer (June 21 - July 22)
A new age calls for a new wave, and a new way of makin' money. If you can master the paradigm switch, you'll be able to switch a pair o' dimes for every one you presently earn and double your income, with extra to buy some, so remember lots of trouble, but you'll be able to live in a much bigger bubble.

Leo (July 23 - Aug. 22)
Like a Greek god/ess gone crazy with passion, hurl thunder bolts and send down a rain of fire upon your creation! Destroy that which you made and show that your power is unsurpassed and you'll literally have yourself a blast. But what's [illegible] from scratch.

Virgo (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22)
When times are rough, Emotion has no trump. Jump to a conclusion just to save some kinda solution to the irritation caused by the situation. Of course, Emotion ain't known for thinkin' things through. That's a job for Intellect to do. This weekend, let it make the call on what action to take. Carnival all!

Libra (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22)
You people pleasers are pretty neat to the Universe's power to [illegible] things in balance. But what about the power in you [illegible] unless you believe in that immense pool of resources

Scorpio (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21)
As Canadian rock comedienne Cerys Adams's The Straight Dope, the Cranes/doors really use the same word for "erase"

Sagittarius (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21)

Capricorn (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19)

Aquarius (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18)
Don't [illegible]

except we have five candidates we don't want to put in charge instead of just two. It is a time that requires great wisdom. Most importantly, we need to take stock of what we know so far. It is as follows:

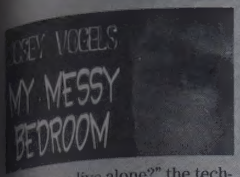
A babe in Toyland



"Do you live alone?" the technician installing my high-speed cable asks me, eyeing the pink jelly vibrator in my to-do box.

"Uh, no, my 300-pound wrestler boyfriend is on his way right now," I think to myself as I notice the "Europerv IX" poster on my wall, the rubber penis necklace pinned to my bulletin board, the foam de-stresser squeezy boob on my desk and the various porn mags, videos and other assorted sex goodies at my work station. I don't usually have home-office guests who don't know what I do for a living.

It was obviously time to clean up my desk. Here's what I found.

The Strapper

The gals at Womyns' Ware, a fabulous female-friendly sex shop in Vancouver (www.womynsware.com) sent me this strap-on harness after they read about my first strap-on. They felt sorry for me and sent me The Strapper, a sturdy leather harness that can be worn jock-strap or butt-floss style. Along with it they sent a sleek, silicone Mistress dildo in beautiful teal. One thing you can count on from Womyns' Ware — they don't sell crap. Silicone dills, said the very informative, frank and entertaining care-and-handling literature that came with my toys, are ideal for anal penetration. "They clean up easily, conduct temperature [try poppin' 'em in the freezer for a frosty thrill] and vibration, and won't absorb lube."

I strapped myself in, popped my teal penis through the hole in the front and suddenly felt quite, um, cocky. The harness was comfy and solid, and my dick didn't droop like it did with the previous version. I modelled it for the boy. He thought it was a good look for me but, like last time, was still leery about the size of my Mistress, sleek as it was. Luckily, my Womyn friends had the perfect solution.

Pink Pearl

In fact, Womyns' Ware carries a model of the pink vibrating egg on its own called the Pink Pearl. I love these vibrating eggs, or "rollers," as they're sometimes called. They're simple, small and get right to the point if you need them to. You can cup them in your fingers over your clitoris during intercourse, whether with a dildo or vibrator or a real live penis. I was thankful to have a replacement but somehow my metal egg seemed more chic and smooth. The bubble-gum pink plastic made the Pink Pearl look like a Barbie accessory. Admittedly, plastic diffuses the vibration slightly more than metal, which is good for those of you who, unlike myself, don't need industrial-style vibration to cum.

The Golden Bumble

I received this Incredible Vibrating Suction Pump Clitoral Stimulator from JoyToyz, a new company out of Montreal that is doing some great sex-toy education work. A reader asked about it after I'd written a piece on the EROS-CTD, a medically approved clitoral pump designed for women suffering arousal problems that is only available through prescription and goes for a hefty almost $400. The Golden Bumble, on the other hand, is a commercial sex toy shaped like a bumblebee that uses a pump and suction cup along with vibration to supposedly "simulate oral sex and massage your clit and labia." I had a hard time getting good suction and I found the vibration far too subtle through the jelly. Sebastian, the lovely lady behind Joy Toyz, assures me some women looove The Golden Bumble. "Many women do not like to have vibrations directly on their clitoris. The Golden Bumble is great for that because it disperses the vibrations to the labia and surrounding area," she said.

Seb suggested I use lube on the suction cup and put the pressure gauge on max to get the best suction. I did and managed to get some decent pulsating action but I still wasn't convinced.

Still, I encourage you to check out Joy Toyz (www.joytoyz.org). Sebastian offers online consultation with customers before they buy.

G-Spot Tango

Through the Joy Toyz newsletter, I found out November is G-Spot Awareness month! A perfect opportunity to test drive The G-Spot Tango, the funky pink jelly vibrator Cable Guy was eyeing. It has a twisty internal rod to get at those hard-to-reach places (like the G-spot) and a vibrating jelly cup attached by what looks like a phone cord. "Numerous controls make it the toy for the sci-fi buff or the closeted control freak," is how it is described on the website of Toronto-based sex shop Come As You Are (www.comeasyouare.com). It sounded like a drill when I turned it on and the multiple controls made me feel like a spaz. A friend dropped by while I was, um, working, and I couldn't figure out how to turn the damn thing off. I had to leave this wiggling pink thing on the floor while I answered the door. ("You busy, Jos? What's that buzzing noise?") Anyway, once she left, I picked the carpet lint off the thing and went back at it. Despite the noise and the wacky controls, the internal twisty action certainly made me aware of my G-spot. And the external vibrating cup thing, if a little difficult to coordinate, was good for simultaneous clitoral stimulation. G-spots of the world, unite!

And I didn't even get to my desk drawers. Happy G-Spot Awareness Month!

You're not gay, you're situational...

Q: I am a 21-year-old male, straight and a virgin. I've been waiting to find the right woman and she's obviously somewhat reclusive. I have been propositioned by quite a few homosexuals, and while I've never been attracted to men, I do find the attention flattering. Anyhow, I'm starting to think that maybe I am gay and just don't know it. I haven't gotten my dick sucked in over six months, and the right hand isn't doing it anymore. I want to get my dick wet! Should I go along with some dude?

Confused and Curious

Hey, CAC: Gayness isn't something that sneaks up on a guy while he's waiting for that reclusive woman to come along. No, gayness is something that kicks down the bedroom doors of terrified 13-year-old boys, crawls under their covers, and refuses to leave. To translate this in mental images that straight men can understand, pretend that puberty is prison and gayness is a big, strong inmate named Rocko. One day you're laying on your bunk minding your own business when Rocko marches into your cell, grabs your ass and announces that you're his bitch. Depending on how hard you resist, Rocko's arrival can either be the beginning of a beautiful relationship or the beginning of a world of hurt. But you know what? In the end you're gonna be Rocko's bitch — resistance is futile — so it's a good idea to let Rocko have his way with you.

. If you were gay, Rocko would've let you know long ago. So how can a guy who isn't gay — that's you, CAC — contemplate getting blow jobs from guys who are? Because you're a horny little shit, CAC, and you're not having any luck with women. Situational homosexuality is a fancy phrase used to describe the behaviour of straight guys who have sex with other men in pussy-free environments such as real prisons (not extended-metaphor prisons). These guys have gay sex because they have no other option. You may not be in prison, CAC, you are in despair, and despairing of ever getting your dick wet again is leading you to contemplate situational homosexuality.

Don't feel bad, CAC: If you go along with some dude, you'll be reviving a grand old tradition, just like modern-day swing dancers. Lots of straight men used to indulge in homosexual sex if they couldn't get their hands on women. Once upon a time, getting a blow job from another guy didn't mean a guy was gay, only that he was desperate; only guys giving blow jobs were gay. Then the gay liberation movement came along and ruined everything. By insisting that it made no difference who was giving and who was getting — both guys were gay — gay libbers scared off the straight boys. These days, only straight men trapped in all-male environments with no hope of escape indulge in situational homosexuality. And it's a crying shame.

So, yes, I'd urge you to "go along" with the next "dude" who propositions you. Don't assume, however, that all gay men are interested in blowing you; some of us don't find straight boys attractive. You might also want to mention to any guy who hits on you that you're only situational, not gay, and that he shouldn't expect to be blown back.

Q: I'm an 18-year-old closeted bi high school student. The only person who knows that I'm bi is my best friend. He does not have much sexual experience, and I know he's straight. How do you think he'd react if I offered him a blow job? I don't feel attracted to him in a love way. I just really want to do him this favour. But I don't want to spoil the friendship. How do I handle this?

Bisexual Boulder Boy

Hey, BBB: The next time the two of you are laughing about sex, slap him on the back and say, "Hey, if you ever want a blow job, just ask. You can close your eyes and pretend I'm Britney Spears and I can close my eyes and pretend you're Brad Pitt." THEN CHANGE THE SUBJECT. For your friendship to survive your selfless offer — let alone the reality of an actual blow job — it's important that you don't give your pal the impression that you're only his friend because you're interested in him sexually. Wrapping the offer up in a joke not only lets him know that you're ready, willing, and able to grant him the favour of a blow job, but also leaves you both with a graceful way out. If he's not interested or if he's offended, tell him that you were just joking and apologize. But if he is interested, he'll ask you to make good on your offer when he's ready to accept the favour.

Telephone Chat-Lines – Almost Mainstream

ADVERTISEMENT

Social interaction is a basic human need. People who are tired of the same old, same old can generally add a little excitement to their lives by meeting new people. Meeting new people can lead to the creation of another group of friends, new activities and maybe even a new love interest.

When it comes to meeting new people, some take a wait and see attitude and rely on things like chance meetings through friends, the workplace, health clubs, or might even decide to heavy up on the bar scene. Other people who are tired of waiting and want immediate interaction can choose to interact with people over the internet or through a telephone chat line.

For many people the internet option works fine if pure boredom relief is the ultimate goal. The major downside to this format is not really knowing what the person at the other end of the keyboard is really like or where they are from. They could be young, or old, or even male or female, and you wouldn't know it. It can be pretty emotionally upsetting to find out that you thought you were having fun with a 25 year old female when you eventually find out you were actually messaging a man twice your age. Even if an interesting relationship does develop, the chance of actually meeting an internet friend has been shown to be extremely slim.

To overcome some of the downside to internet chat, the last few years has seen telephone based chat systems become widely accepted. A telephone based chat system confidentially links both men and women primarily from the local area. It offers all the same interactions as if you were simply talking on the phone, but your true identity is not revealed to the people you are talking with – until you're ready to reveal it. Telephone chat is usually always free for women and can be a great way to meet someone new. From the conversations, you will be able to easily identify that you are talking with someone of the opposite sex and also be able to get a good idea of their age. Then, if you decide you want to actually meet face-to-face with someone, the telephone chat system is locally based, and the other person is likely from the same area as you.

One telephone system called the GrapeVine, actually combines the benefits of internet chat with telephone chat. In addition to being able to interact with local callers, it also lets you interact with other callers from right across Canada – if you choose to do so.

More than ever, people tired of things like the bar scene have turned to the fun and discreet world of the telephone chat system. Whether you're looking for your soul mate, or just to have a few hours of fun, check out the advantages of telephone chat.
